COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS AND ACCREDITATION

ASC's Committee on Standards and Accreditation for Criminal Justice Programs met with a coordinate committee of the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences on February 19 at Las Vegas.

The purpose of the meeting, as reported in the March issue of THE CRIMINOLOGIST, was to discuss the full implications of the widely distributed "Accreditation Guidelines for Post-Secondary Criminal Justice Education Programs," developed by the ACJS.

President William Amos has recently appointed a standing Coordinating Committee to serve on a proposed Council for Criminal Justice Education. This Committee is charged with working with the ACJS on the implementation, implications, and policies of accreditation standards and guidelines.

The Coordinating Committee for the proposed Council for Criminal Justice Education is composed of Geoffrey Alpert, Alvin Cohn, Edith Flynn, Don Gottfredson, Elmer Johnson, Clarence Romig, Barbara Price, Terry Thornberry, and Harry Allen (Chair).

Alvin Cohn and Charles Wellford, two of the ASC committee representatives, met with ACJS representatives along with representatives of the American Sociological Association, the American Psychological Association, the Association of Doctoral Programs in Criminal Justice and Criminology, and the American Society of Public Administration on March 23.

The group identified the "problems of establishing standards and the procedures for standard application for the programs in criminology and criminal justice as the central issue," Charles Wellford reported. The group recommended that a grant or contract be let to begin the process of standard setting and possible eventual accreditation.

AD HOC COMMITTEE TO SELECT ANNUAL MEETING SITES

William E. Amos, ASC President, has appointed an ad hoc committee, chaired by Harry Allen, Treasurer, charging it with exploring the possibility of contracting with a major hotel chain for the 1979-1983 annual conventions.

Amos noted: “In order to keep hotel room costs to a minimum for our members attending the conventions, we must explore all avenues for keeping costs down. I want this committee to discuss the possibility of securing a firm price for hotel rooms for these five years, and to advise the Executive Board of the relative advantages and disadvantages of this arrangement.”

Allen noted that many other professional organizations are exploring these options and suggested that a report would be drafted for the November board meeting.

The annual meeting sites are Boston (1979), San Francisco (1980), Washington, D.C. (1981), and San Juan (1982). The 1983 site is still under discussion, Allen reported. Arrangements for the 1978 meeting (Dallas) have already been finalized.

The Board decision is not expected until February 1978, and hotel chains which wish to be considered should contact:

ASC Members: have you paid your 1977 dues?

1977-1978 ELECTION OF OFFICERS

On May 20, the ASC office mailed out to the 1977 paid active members a memorandum regarding the election of officers for 1977-1978. In accordance with the constitution and by-laws, the Nominating Committee, with the approval of the Executive Board of the American Society of Criminology, has prepared a slate of candidates for the 1977-1978 election.

The slate, distributed by mail, invites nominations for the next two months, prior to the closing of nominations. Any member receiving 35 nominations from fellow members shall be entered on the slate for the office designated.

Nominations or endorsements should be sent to: Executive Secretary, American Society of Criminology, 1314 Kinnear Road, Suite 212, Columbus, OH 43212.

By position, and in alphabetical order, the nominated candidates to date are:

President: Ronald L. Akers
Elmer H. Johnson

Vice President-Elect: Brian A. Grosman
Frank R. Scarpitti

Executive Counselor: Alvin W. Cohn
Barbara Raffel Price
Benjamin Ward
Charles F. Wellford

The deadline for receipt of nominations from the membership is July 18, 1977. A place will be provided on the ballot for write-in candidates.

Election ballots will be mailed on July 25 to all active members in good standing as of July 1. Ballots are to be returned to the ASC office by October 17.
ASC CONSTITUTION CHANGES

At the May Executive Board meeting of ASC, Barbara Price, Chair, Constitutional Review Committee, announced that Amendments #1, #2, and #3 passed overwhelmingly.

Amendment #1—Proposed that the membership elect a Vice President-Elect rather than the present procedure of electing a Vice-President. This would allow the President-Elect to have help in planning the years’ activities for his term in office. The Vice President-Elect would then become Vice-President, concurrent with the President-Elect assuming office.

Amendment #2 (upon approval of Amendment #1)—This amendment makes the Vice President-Elect a voting member of the Executive Board.

Amendment #3—This amendment changes the number of votes necessary to be elected. Currently, candidates must receive a majority of all votes cast. With approval of this amendment, a candidate for President-Elect or Vice President-Elect each receiving the larger plurality of 40% or more of the votes cast will be elected. The two candidates for Executive Counselor receiving the most votes will be elected.

Run-off ballots have been necessary in the past when no one has received a majority of the votes cast. Such run-off ballots are rather costly to prepare, and this amendment will save the Society considerable money in the future.

President William Amos requested, with the approval of the Executive Board, that the current Vice President, Don Gottfredson, serve an additional year in that capacity. This will allow continuity in the future for the Vice President-Elect to assume the office of Vice President.

COMMENTARY

HIGHER EDUCATION IN CRIMINOLOGY AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE*
by J. Price Foster, Director, Office of Criminal Justice Education and Training
Law Enforcement Assistance Administration

Higher education in crime-related studies has been stimulated by a number of trends in recent years: recognition of crime as a primary national concern in public policy, increasing monetary support for criminological and criminal justice education through the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, increasing emphasis on career preparation in higher education, and rising salaries designed to make criminal justice more attractive as a career. Underlying all these trends is the increasing attention to the goal of achieving "professional" status for criminal justice personnel—especially in the fields of law enforcement and corrections.

The recent interest in crime-related higher education has resulted in an unparalleled growth in the number of available degree programs. In 1965 there were fewer than 100 programs nationwide, and in 1977 the number exceeds 1000.

Two basic and closely related issues have surfaced and intensified during this decade of phenomenal growth in crime-related higher education. One concerns the extent to which linkages should be established between the personnel needs of the field and the collegiate response, while the other focuses on questions of minimum standards of quality and the location of these programs in the academic environment.

The two-pronged controversy over education in criminology and criminal justice has emerged in the context of a much broader concern over the role of higher education in American society. As never before, from within and without, the higher education community is being called upon to justify itself—its purpose, its outputs, its priorities, its allocation of resources, and its relationship to the individual and society.

Many educators are painfully aware of the consequences of a lack of sensitivity to the need for graduates in some social and behavioral sciences. Therefore, the notion of assessing needs and providing appropriate educational responses seems to be professionally responsible. There have been several attempts to assess educational needs in criminology and criminal justice. However, these efforts have to be characterized, for the most part, as woefully naive.

It is important now for us to develop and implement planning methodologies that are sufficiently sophisticated to permit meaningful research at the state and local levels so as to form a more adequate basis for educational program development planning, enrollment projecting, and student counseling. This is no easy undertaking because manpower planning is at best a highly tenuous proposition and implementation is often particularly difficult to manage.

Although our knowledge about the desired educational involvement in criminology and criminal justice is extremely limited, over the past decade crime-related degree programs have been established that enjoy an overwhelming popularity as measured by enrollment statistics. There are obviously many reasons for this, one of which is the existence of LEAA’s Law Enforcement Education Program. However, the evidence suggests that LEEP support constitutes a relatively small fraction of the cost of tuition for criminology and criminal justice students.

Many of us would prefer to believe this popularity is primarily a result of a legitimate academic response to a field in need of college-educated personnel and that the offerings are academically sound and recognized as areas of inquiry sufficient to merit this interest. However, there is some suggestion this popularity is at least partially attributable to a relaxing of academic standards, a lack of curricular substance and less than adequate instruction.

The notion that many institutions are offering crime-related degree programs that are academically marginal provided the impetus for concerted efforts to investigate the possibility of developing minimum standards for programs in criminology and criminal justice. Such efforts have resulted in the establishment of accreditation and standards committees in both the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences and the American Society of Criminology. LEAA is also very concerned about this issue and plans are being made to make funds available for a cooperative effort involving the ASC and ACJS as well as other professional organizations to establish academic minimum standards for the field.

Although some research has been undertaken, many issues still must be resolved before meaningful standards, which incorporate the unique features of the criminology and criminal justice field, can be developed.

REVISED FEDERAL CRIMINAL CODE

A substantially revised version of the proposed federal criminal code has been introduced as S. 1437 (McClellan and Kennedy) and H.R. 6869 (Rodino). The bills contain a modern criminal code that defines offenses in straightforward language with consistent terminology.

The confusing array of culpability standards in current law has been reduced to four clearly defined terms. Federal jurisdictional bases are separate from the definitions of offenses, which increases the clarity of the descriptions of offenses and will make it easier to amend the criminal laws in the future.

For example, approximately 70 theft offenses have been consolidated in one section, with one definition of theft and a list of more than 30 bases for exercising federal jurisdiction. If a new federal program were created for which the Congress believed a theft offense should be provided, it would be a simple matter to add another jurisdictional base, leaving the definition of theft and the grading of sentences for theft untouched.

The most important feature of the latest version of the proposed federal criminal code is the complete revision of federal law relating to sentencing. The bills provide for creation of a U.S. Sentencing Commission in the judicial branch which would issue guidelines and policy statements on sentencing and parole in federal criminal cases.

The guidelines would take into consideration various combinations of aggravating and mitigating circumstances and characteristics and history of defendants. A sentencing judge would be required to consider the guidelines in setting a sentence. If the judge decided that the sentencing range provided in the guidelines was inappropriate, he or she could sentence outside the guidelines, but would have to state reasons for doing so. The defendant could appeal a sentence above the range suggested in the guidelines, while the government could appeal, with the approval of the Attorney General, a sentence below the suggested range.

The sentencing guidelines would recommend a term of parole ineligibility appropriate for a person sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and the defendant or the government could appeal a sentence that included a term of parole ineligibility inconsistent with the guidelines. The term of parole ineligibility could not extend into the last one-tenth of the term of imprisonment in any event.

Hearings commenced early in June by the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures, with emphasis on the new sentencing provisions.

The new bills are the product of months of efforts to resolve controversial issues in earlier versions of a proposed new criminal code. The provisions of earlier versions that have caused substantial controversy have either been modified, deleted from the law, or left for later consideration. (For example, provisions concerning definitions of defenses, espionage offenses, and the death penalty have been deleted so that they may be considered separately.) The result is the compromise bill that is expected to receive early congressional attention.

ASC EXECUTIVE BOARD: MAY MEETING HIGHLIGHTS

The Executive Board of the American Society of Criminology met May 6-7, 1977, in Dallas, Texas, with President William Amos presiding. Others present at the meeting included: Harry Allen, Mary Almore, Geoffrey Alpert, Paul Brantingham, Duncan Chappell, Paul Friley, G. Thomas Gitchoff, C. Ray Jeffery, Elmer Johnson, June Morrison, Charles Newman, Barbara Price, Edward Sagarin, Joseph Scott, and Benjamin Ward.

In order that the membership may remain informed concerning the Society's activities, this summary report of the Executive Board's actions is presented.

1977 Convention Report

The 1977 American Society of Criminology's annual meeting, to be held in Atlanta, Georgia, November 16-20, will consist of 71 panels divided into three primary areas: (1) theory, (2) public policy, and (3) evaluation.

In addition, three plenary sessions are planned. Richard Quinney and Austin Turk will participate in one session on radical criminology. Judge David Bazelon and Sid Brounstein from the American Civil Liberties Union will participate in another plenary session on public policy. The third plenary session is tentatively planned around the topic of the future of LEAA. As soon as a new director of LEAA is selected, he will be invited to participate along with Sarah Carey and Susan White.

Arrangements have been made with the Georgian Terrace Hotel, a few blocks from the Colony Square Hotel, in Atlanta for student housing at special rates.

The final program will be mailed to the membership in the near future.

1978 Convention Report

President-Elect C. Ray Jeffery reported that the theme for the 1978 ASC meeting to be held in Dallas is Interdisciplinary and International Criminology.

The meeting will have three major topics: biological approaches to criminology, psychological and psychoanalytic approaches, and the third theme will deal with economic and legal implications of criminology.

Jeffery indicated that a number of foreign criminologists will be invited to participate. In addition, an effort will be made to devote considerable time to practical policies for practitioners.

1982 Annual ASC Meeting in Puerto Rico

The Executive Board selected San Juan, Puerto Rico, as the site for the 1982 annual meeting (substituting Puerto Rico for Kansas City). The ASC Site Selection Committee is presently selecting a site for the 1983 meeting.

Husband-Wife Memberships

The Executive Board established a new membership category: husband-wife. A husband-wife membership will allow two individuals to join the Society at an additional cost of $5.00 over the cost of a single membership. This will allow both parties to vote in the annual elections, but will provide only one copy of the journal and one copy of the newsletter. In addition, both would be required to pay single registration fees at the annual meetings.

The Board also considered the issue of allowing an institute membership in the Society. The idea was to allow an institute to join at approximately double the cost of an individual membership and allow two members of the institute to participate as voting members. The institute would also receive two copies of the journal and the newsletter. This suggestion is being reconsidered by the Constitutional Review Committee.

New Editor Selected for CRIMINOLOGY

The Executive Board selected James A. Inciardi as the new editor for the Society's journal, CRIMINOLOGY. Inciardi is affiliated with the Division of Criminal Justice at the University of Delaware. The exact details of transferring the editorship from New York (John Jay College of Criminal Justice, City University of New York) to the University of Delaware will be worked out by the present editors, Donal E.J. MacNamara and Edward Sagarin and the new editor.

International Relations Committee

The Co-Chair of the International Relations Committee of ASC, Paul Friday, indicated that the Committee is maintaining files of foreign criminologists who might be helpful to Society members in studying or conducting research abroad. He indicated a willingness to share these names with Society members who may be interested in traveling abroad or inviting foreign scholars to the U.S. for a one-term visiting appointment.

He also reported that a meeting on International Deviance and Criminology is tentatively being planned in conjunction with the International Sociological Association's meeting scheduled for 1978 in Uppsala, Sweden.

ACJS/ASC Standards Project

President Amos reported that the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences has been working for some time on standards for accrediting criminal justice programs throughout the United States. They have approached the Society to work with them in this regard.

A liaison committee was appointed by President Amos consisting of Donal E.J. MacNamara, C. Ray Jeffery, Charles Newman, Simon Dinitz, and William Amos to work with them in this regard. The desirability of the two societies working together in developing standards for accreditation of criminal justice and criminology programs will be explored at a meeting scheduled to be held at John Jay College in June.

ASC Archives

A lengthy discussion was held as to the desirability of establishing at some permanent site a location for the Society's archives. This would consist not only of ASC proceedings and papers but, in addition, working papers and monographs of distinguished criminologists and other criminology material as it became available. Amos indicated he would be forming a committee to look into the possibilities of such an undertaking in the near future.

As a point of information and comparison, the total ASC membership as of February 29, the end of the last membership year, was 2,057: 1,480 actives and 557 students.

A second notice to members who have not paid their 1977 dues was mailed in early May.

As per the Membership Committee Report under date of January 31, 1977, we are proceeding to send letters of invitation to those persons for whom lists of potential members are available. Thus far we have sent out a total of 2,204 letters. This total does not include persons who have written for materials and application forms.

The number of new members recruited during this current drive (November to April) totals 269: 140 actives and 129 students.

Currently, we are running a little behind the recruitment level of last year (to date): 269 compared to 411 for the comparable period last year. We are increasing the number of invitation letters for April of 1977 compared to April of 1976: 3,000 versus 357 for the same month last year.

Part of the lag in recruitment can be attributed to the relative lateness in which we are seeking State Representative inputs. We are approximately one month later this year than last.
AMERICAN PROBATION AND PAROLE ASSOCIATION INSTITUTE

The Second Annual Institute of the American Probation and Parole Association will be held at the Wisconsin Hotel, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on August 20-21, 1977, just preceding the American Correctional Association’s 107th Congress of Correction.

Workshop sessions have been developed to focus on long-standing issues and recent developments in the practice of probation and parole. All such workshops will be related to the Institute theme, “Probation/Parole and the Winds of Change.” To facilitate delegate participation, workshop sessions have been scheduled for both the morning and afternoon sessions on August 21, 1977.

Among others, workshops will be conducted in the following areas: Doing More With Less—The Impact of Tight Budgets on Probation and Parole; Can We Protect the Community While Acting as Client Advocates?; Viable Models of Case Management; Increased Orchestration of Community Resources by Probation and Parole; The Victim: The Forgotten Person in the Criminal Justice Process; and The Role of Probation in Lower Court Drunk Driver Programs.

In addition to the workshop sessions, the program includes a general session, an Institute luncheon, and a communication hour for probation and parole practitioners. A keynote speaker will be featured at the luncheon, and the Association will bestow the new Walter Dunbar Memorial Award on the first recipient at this time.

The registration fee for the Institute is $12.00 for members, $13.00 for non-members, and $10.00 for students (fee includes a luncheon). For further information, registration and hotel reservation forms, contact one of the two Institute Chairpersons listed below:

ACADEMY OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE SCIENCES
CALL FOR 1978 PAPERS

The 1978 meeting of the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences will be held in New Orleans, Louisiana, from March 8 to March 10 at the Braniff Place Hotel. The theme for the Program is “Interdisciplinary Perspectives on Criminal Justice.”

NATIONAL JAIL CENTER CREATED

The National Institute of Corrections has established a National Jail Center in Boulder, CO, to serve as the coordinator for state, federal, and local efforts to improve U.S. jails and their staffs. Craig Dobson, Program Coordinator, will direct operations from temporary quarters at the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education (in Boulder) until a permanent site is found.

The objectives of the National Jail Center will be to provide (1) training for jail personnel; (2) information services for jail administrators, elected officials, and concerned citizens; and (3) technical assistance to state and local jails.

NIC will allocate about $1.5 million to the Center in its first year of operations. An estimated $300,000 will cover operating costs; the balance will be used to provide training programs, develop materials, and fund innovative efforts by state and local agencies, universities, and organizations dedicated to the improvement of jail programs.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

I have just seen the March issue of The Criminologist, which, incidentally, I have perused with interest.

At two places in the issue, I noticed a reference to the Office of Policy and Planning in the Department of Justice. It may be of interest to you and your readers to know that OPP has been replaced by a new office, created by Attorney General Griffin Bell, entitled Office For Improvements in the Administration of Justice. A copy of the Attorney General's order creating this office is enclosed for your information.

We will carry forward some of the functions of the former Office of Policy and Planning. However, we have a much broader mission, and we will be working primarily all across the court system on problems of structure, organization, and jurisdiction, with an effort to mount a comprehensive attack on the ills besetting the judicial system.

Assistant Attorney General
U.S. Department of Justice

CENTER FOR RESEARCH ON CRIMINAL JUSTICE

According to an announcement by the Center for Research on Criminal Justice, an Oakland, California-based organization, the Center was founded in 1973 in order to recognize "the need for more systematic investigation and greater theoretical clarity in the struggle against repression."

Organized initially by the North American Congress on Latin America (NACLA) and students and faculty from the School of Criminology, Berkeley, the Center is described as "...a progressive, non-profit research organization involved in: (1) research and writing; (2) developing a specialized library and data bank; (3) supporting community struggles through speaking, workshops, and technical advice; and (4) deepening our theoretical understanding of the state and repression in a capitalist society."

The first major project of the Center was the publication in 1975 of The Iron Fist and the Velvet Glove: An Analysis of the U.S. Police.

The Center indicates that its library and data bank are available to researchers and organizations involved in progressive struggles concerning crime and repression. Additionally, it would like to be kept informed about anti-repression struggles so that it can develop a better network of communication among various organizations and defense committees.

For further information, contact the Center at P.O. Box 12675, Oakland, CA 94604.
