FROM THE NEW EDITORS

This issue represents the beginning of our co-editorship of The Criminologist. As is the case in any transition of a publication, as incoming editors we owe gratitude to those who preceded us in this office. Foremost on the list of people we want to thank is Stephen Brown, the outgoing editor. Not only did he take a very good publication from Hugh Barlow and made improvements, he graciously agreed to assist us in the transition. In fact, the current issue is more his than ours and we are sure we will continue to need his expert advice in the months to come.

Sarah Hall is another person we wish to thank for her assistance. As everyone involved in ASC knows, she is the true center of the organization. Without her not too much would be achieved. Undoubtedly, we will continue to make life difficult for her with our never ending need for assistance.

GENETICS, CRIME AND THE CANCELLED CONFERENCE

C. Ray Jeffery
Florida State University

The Conference
A conference to explore the relationship between genetics and crime to be held at the University of Maryland on October 9, 1992 was cancelled when the sponsoring institution, the National Institute of Health, withdrew its financial support. The proposed conference drew criticism from a Maryland psychiatrist who objected to the racial implications of genetic studies. A major study of violence and genetics was also challenged.

The major reasons given for opposition to the conference focused on (1) the racial implications of such a conference, (2) the argument that genes do not cause crime, and (3) the argument that psychological and sociological variables are also involved in crime. Several erroneous statements are involved in the cancellation of the conference which must be challenged. Statements concerning the cancellation can be found in the Chronicle of Higher Education (September 2 and September 16, 1992), and the New York Times (September 15, 1992).

Criminology as an Interdisciplinary Science
The role of biology and psychiatry in crime has been a major part of criminology since the days of Lombroso, Freud, H. Ellis, A. Drahms, and H. Maudsley in the late nineteenth century. Major studies of criminals were made at that time from a biological perspective (Jeffery, at press). In the 1920s criminology was developed as a part of sociology, and the biological and psychological aspects of behavior were ignored by sociologists. In recent years there has been a renewed effort to create an interdisciplinary criminology through the union of biology.

We are also indebted to some people at Sam Houston State University. Most important in the effort to bring this publication to our campus is our dean, Tim Flanagan, who encouraged us to apply for the co-editorship and agreed to provide us with all the institutional resources we needed. Included in these resources are the skills and labor of our managing editor, Kay Billingsley. In her other capacities, Kay is the publications editor of the Criminal Justice Center at SHSU and will now add The Criminologist to her long list of duties. Thank you to all for their enthusiasm and support. We are looking forward to the next three years.

Editorial transitions also provide an opportunity to lay out goals and objectives for the future of the publication. We see The Criminologist as serving many functions. It should provide its readers with information concerning the American Society of Criminology, regarding both general organizational developments and specific issues such as the annual meetings. It should also serve as a source of information that is of relevance to professionals in a given field. For criminologists, this information may relate to technological developments, theoretical advances, vacancy announcements, teaching techniques, research opportunities, funding sources, publication outlets, and the publication of new books. And, it should be a forum for the exchange of ideas among its readers.

While The Criminologist already serves many of these functions, we believe that by retaining some of its features and adding new ones, we can elaborate upon the work done by previous editors. Specifically, we propose the following:

- Retention of the practice of publishing a “Feature Essay” in each issue. Essays in the future may deal with the pressures and opportunities unique to criminologists working in specific settings (e.g., agencies, community colleges, universities, research institutes). We would especially like to emphasize editorial essays relevant to issues within the discipline and, perhaps, the association.

- Addition of three columns that deal with teaching, research, and service news, respectively (e.g., reviews of software packages).

- Retention of the position announcements.

- Periodic publication of a statement by the editor of Criminology concerning the needs and status of the journal.

- Calls for letters to the editors concerning salient issues in the field (e.g., capital punishment).

- Expansion of the feature “Around the ASC” to include more information on hearings, promotions, honors, and new publications by members.

- Publication of the preliminary program for the annual ASC meetings.

- Addition of a book review section (see announcement on page 9 of this issue).

In general, we hope to continue the work by previous editors and build upon it where possible. To do so, we need the help of all members of the society. Please call us (409-294-1663 or 409-294-1667), write or fax (409-294-1653) your ideas, suggestions, and recommendations. This newsletter belongs to the members and should serve your needs.

Letters to the Editor . . .

To the Editors:

I take issue with your printing of the article, "Race, Crime and Justice: The Aftermath of Rodney King," by Pope and Ross (The Criminologist, Vol. 17, No. 6, Nov-Dec, 92). It is polemical rather than "scientific"--and does not do justice to your fine publication, Criminology (see e.g., p. 7, "Given the composition of the jury and the location of the trial, one might logically expect such a verdict").

I have been a member of ASC many years, I teach criminal justice, I've practiced criminal law--and I question your publication of this particular paper. I, too, am interested in equal justice--but I am not sure this article advances scholarly discussion of the topic.

Yours truly,

Oren J. Steinfeldt

AROUND THE ASC

Susan O. White has joined the National Science Foundation as a visiting scientist and Director of the Law and Social Sciences Program. She succeeds Michael C. Musheno, who returns to the School of Justice Studies at Arizona State University. White looks forward to talking with law and social science colleagues about their research interests. The next target date for submission of proposals to NSF is January 15, 1993 for regular proposals and February 1, 1993 for the special competition on Global Perspectives on Sociological Studies.

Dean J. Champion, California State University-Long Beach, was recently selected as Editor of the ACIS/Anderson Issues in Crime and Justice Series, which is a three-year editorship, 1993-1996, sponsored by the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences and Anderson Publishing Company. The Editor appoints and works with six individual book editors in developing six different scholarly criminology monographs and/or collections of original essays/research over the three-year period. Professor Champion also received the 1992 Visiting Scholar Award from the National Center for Juvenile Justice, Pittsburgh, PA. His work focused upon attorney usage by nearly one million juveniles in five states over the ten-year period, 1980-1989. Champion's current projects include a book on police-community relations, co-authored with George Rush, forthcoming with Prentice-Hall, and a resource book on predicting dangerousness and risk, forthcoming with Greenwood Press.

Dr. James Alan Fox has been named Dean of the College of Criminal Justice at Northeastern University in Boston. Dr. Fox joined the faculty of Northeastern in 1977, following his graduate training in criminology and statistics at the University of Pennsylvania. Dean Fox has published seven books, including Mass Murder, America's Growing Menace (with Jack Levin), and a variety of articles pertaining to statistics, multiple murder, capital punishment and arson. Finally, Dr. Fox is the founder and Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of Quantitative Criminology and Book Series Editor of the Pleaum Series in Crime and Justice.

Bonnie Berry (see "Response to Stitt and Giacopassi," Vol. 17, No. 6, The Criminologist) is newly affiliated with Pacific Lutheran University in Tacoma, Washington, where she is Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology and Research Associate in the Center for Social Research.

We would like to include in the "Around the ASC" section information on doctoral degrees awarded to members of the ASC or chaired by members of the ASC. Please include the name of the degree recipient, the name of the dissertation chair, the title of the dissertation, the name of the program and university, and the date awarded.
ASC
CALL FOR ENTRIES

1993 ASC GENE CARTE STUDENT PAPER COMPETITION
We invite participation in The American Society of Criminology Gene Carte Student Paper Competition. These awards are given to recognize outstanding scholarly work of students. Following are the procedures for the 1993 competition.

WHO IS ELIGIBLE
Any student currently enrolled on a full-time basis in an academic program at either the undergraduate or graduate level.

SPECIFICATIONS FOR PAPERS
Papers may be conceptual and/or empirical. They must be directly related to criminology. Papers must be 7,500 words or less, typewritten, double-spaced on 8-1/2 x 11 white paper using standard format for the organization of text, citations and references. Submissions must be accompanied by a letter, indicating the author(s) enrollment status and co-signed by the dean, department chair or program director. Author(s) name(s), department(s), and (optional) advisor(s) MUST appear only on the title page, since papers will be evaluated anonymously.

DEADLINE
Papers must be submitted with a postmark on or before April 15, 1993 to:
FINN-AAGE ESSENSEN
Department of Criminal Justice
1100 Niehardt
University of Nebraska-Omaha
Lincoln, Nebraska 68588-0630

Entries will be judged by a panel of scholars in the field and, therefore, it will be necessary that SEVEN copies of papers be provided.

PROCEDURES FOR JUDGING ENTRIES
Judges will independently rate entries according to criteria such as the quality of the conceptualization, significance of the topic, clarity and aptness of methods, literacy quality, command of relevant work in the field, and contribution to criminology. The judges' selection of entries for awards will be final.

AWARDS
The 1st, 2nd, and 3rd place papers will be awarded prizes of $300, $150, and $100, respectively and will be eligible for presentation at the 1993 meeting of The American Society of Criminology in Phoenix, Arizona, October 26-31. The 1st prize winner also will be granted a travel award to the meeting. The Committee may decide that no entry is of sufficient quality to declare a winner. Fewer than three awards may be given. Prize-winning students will be acknowledged at the Annual Meeting Awards Ceremony.

NOTIFICATION OF AWARDS
The author(s) of entries selected by the judges for awards will be notified in writing by August 1, 1993.
RESEARCH GRANTS

The Henry A. Murray Research Center of Radcliffe college is pleased to announce the availability of grant funds for postdoctoral level research drawing on the Murray Center’s data resources for doctoral dissertations in the topic areas listed below. The Center also offers a visiting scholars-in-residence program.

The Center has recently chosen to focus its own research and other programs around an integrative theme. This theme is entitled Character and Competence: Exploring Pathways of Development Across the Lifespan.

The Radcliffe Research Support Program offers small grants to post-doctoral investigators. Funds are provided for travel to the Murray Center, duplicating, computer time, assistance in coding data, and other research expenses. Grants of up to $5,000 are available at two deadlines: October 15 and April 15.

The Jeanne Humphrey Block Dissertation Award Program offers grants of $2,500 to a woman doctoral student. Proposals should focus on the development of sex differences or some aspect of girls’ or women’s development, focusing on sex or gender differences or some developmental issue of particular concern to girls or women. Projects drawing on Murray Center data will be given priority, although this is not a requirement. Applications must be postmarked by April 1.

The Henry A. Murray Dissertation Award Program offers grants of $2,500 to women and men doctoral students. Projects should focus on some aspect of “the study of lives,” concentrating on issues in human development or personality. Priority is given to projects drawing on center data. Applications must be postmarked by April 1.

The Visiting Scholars Program at the Murray Center offers office space and access to the facilities of Radcliffe College and Harvard University each year to eight to ten scholars who wish to investigate some aspect of women and social change or the study of lives over time. The program does not include a stipend. Scholars come for a wide range of fields. An important goal of the center is to promote the use of its archival data for new research. Therefore, strong preference is given to researchers utilizing the Murray Center’s data resources.

If you are interested in applying for a research grant or visiting scholar appointment, please write to the Grants Administrator at the following address for complete program descriptions and application guidelines.

psychology, sociology, and law (Jeffery, 1990; Jeffery, at press; Fishbein, 1992; Mednick, Moffitt and Stack, 1987; Mednick et al., 1982; Ellis, 1982).

Psychiatry has always been based on neurology and medicine, though during the 1920-1950 era it became independent and based on Freudian mentalistic concepts and non-physical personality. Freud himself predicted the return of psychiatry to neurology, and in recent years there has been a real growth in neuropsychiatry as a combination of psychiatry, neurology, and brain chemistry (neurotransmitter systems). This development can be seen in a series of books published by the American Psychiatric Press (Yudofsky and Hales, 1992; Coccaro and Murphy, 1990; Schatzberg and Cole, 1991; Kaplan and Saddock, 1991). Freudian psychiatry was a failure in the treatment of delinquent and criminal behaviors, and it was rejected by criminologists as a means of treating criminals. Neuropsychiatry offers a unique opportunity to develop diagnostic and prevention techniques within an interdisciplinary criminology which would make use of CAT scans, PET scans, MRI scans, and EEG tests.

The psychiatrist who criticized the conference on genetics and crime obviously is not acquainted with neuropsychiatry as it exists today.

Genes Cause Behavior
The critics of the conference objected to a study of the genetic contribution to criminal behavior. At a basic level this raises the issue of whether genes should be included in the study of human behavior. Genes are an important aspect of human behavior and should be part of the study of human behavior. It can be stated that genes do not cause behavior, but rather are related to physical traits which in turn produce behavior. Genes in interaction with the environment create a brain and nervous system. The relationship is ENVIRONMENT-BRAIN-BEHAVIOR, and not GENES-BEHAVIOR. The manner in which genes influence behavior will be discussed below.

Genes Cause Crime
The statement is made that genes do not cause crime. Crime is a legal concept involving the behavior of those involved in the creation and application of the criminal law, such as judges, lawyers, legislators. It can be argued that the human brain is capable of learning and transmitting cultural systems, including legal systems. The level of analysis for legal systems is several levels of analysis above that of genetics or personality or learning.

Genes do not cause, but they are involved in the creation of the human brain which does create those behaviors associated with criminal law and the criminal justice system.

Genes Cause Criminal Behavior
I assume the statement that crime studies should not involve genetics means simply that there are no specific genes for murder or rape or robbery. Many behaviors are classified by law as crimes, including theft, fraud, murder, rape, and robbery. It is obvious that a great number of genes and environmental experiences are in interaction to produce any given behavior. As was stated above, there are no specific genes for specific behaviors as will be seen in our discussion below.

Genetic/Environment Interaction
Genes do not produce behavior, criminal behavior, or crime, but rather genes produce physical traits which make up the individual organism, usually called the phenotype. Except for identical twins no two individuals possess the same genetic structure since through meiosis only half of the chromosomes go to the egg or sperm. Thus parents and children or brothers and sisters share 50 percent of their genes. This means that individual differences are of great importance in behavioral analysis (Suzuki et al., 1989; Cummings, 1988; McClearn and DeFries, 1973).

Not only do individuals differ genetically, but the way in which the genes are expressed depends upon the environment in which the genes interact. It is not Genes OR Environment, but Genes IN INTERACTION WITH Environment. It is not heredity or environment, but heredity and environment. The argument that genetics is not critical to the analysis of crime, addictions, and violence is based upon the notion that the environment is the cause of behavior and therefore genetics is unnecessary.

If, as the critics say, crime and criminal behavior involve poverty, social norms or family structure, then why search for genetic variables?

We cannot understand the impact of environmental variables on behavior without also understanding the impact of environmental variables on genes. The environment must act on something if it is to produce a given species or individual. The genotype of the horse or rat produces a different species or individual than that of a fish or insect. The opponents of genetic analysis assume that everything is environmental, and the model is Environment = Phenotype wherein genetic variation is zero.

Not only does the environment determine the manner in which genetic systems develop into phenotypes or organisms, but environmental factors can also alter genetic structures as in the case of nuclear contamination or other types of environmental contamination. A fetus exposed to alcohol or tobacco or cocaine will develop a different type of brain and body than one not so exposed. Cocaine or alcohol in the environment does not act in isolation from the genetic system, but acts on the biochemistry of the genes directly. Without the genetic blueprint for a human brain, alcohol and cocaine would not interfere with the develop-
A major difference between the approach used in modern science and that represented by the opponents of the conference is that the modern neuropsychiatrist or psychologist regards behavior within a physical model, that is, experience enters the body via the sensory system, is processed by the brain, and the brain then sends information to the motor system as behavioral adaptations of the individual to the environment. This is always an Organism X Environment model of behavior. Such a model does not claim, as do the critics of the conference, that poverty, family influences, socialization, and personality development occur outside of biological processes involving genetics and brain structures. Poverty impacts on the brain in terms of brain trauma, nutrition, lead contamination, birth defects, and in many other ways which eventually impact on behavior. Lead contamination, which is widespread among our youths, leads to low birth weight, mental retardation, learning disabilities, hyperactivity, and other related behavioral disorders. The environment does not impact directly on behavior as the environmentalist states, but only impacts on behavior through the brain. To state that the study of violence or drug addiction should not involve biology is to ignore knowledge that has been with us for over one hundred years.

It is known, for example, that schizophrenia and depression are related to diet and to the neurotransmitter system. Damage to the frontal lobes can cause uncontrollable rage and violence. Drugs such as cocaine act on the dopaminergic neurotransmitter system, and drug addictions are now being treated by nutrition and medications which alter the neurochemistry of the brain (Kalat, 1992; Schatzberg and Cole, 1991; Yudofsky and Hales, 1992). To exclude such scientific information from a planned conference on genetics and crime, or from a future conference or research agenda on violence, is inexcusable and down-right dangerous.

Biology as Racism

One of the major complaints about the proposed conference is the claim that there are major racial implications for such a conference. Human knowledge can always be misused for political purposes, but this is no reason to abandon scientific research. Ignorance can also be used for political purposes.

The interesting thing is that genetic differences are at the individual level and not the group level. One cannot state that the genetic structure of blacks differs totally from that of whites, or even that a biological definition of race is possible. In-group differences in IQ between black and whites will be greater than between-group differences. The so-called "black population" of the United States is so genetically mixed that conclusions based on group data cannot be applied to individual cases. Whether or not a specific individual is violent or alcoholic depends upon his/her individual genetic makeup plus his/her environmental background.

If a black is violent his/her violence is related to his/her specific genes, and not the genes of other individuals, even brothers or fathers. No two individuals, even two "black" individuals, have the same genetic/environmental backround, and to state, as did the psychiatrist who objected to the racism of the conference, that the study of biological factors in crime would be dangerous for the black community is unfounded. One does not need scientific knowledge to be racist.

A related point is that a high crime rate is found in the black community with a high rate of violence and drug addiction. The highest cause of death among black male youths is murder, and the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta has classified murder as a disease to be studied within the context of epidemiology and the medical sciences. It is also true that these acts of violence are by blacks against blacks. Over 90 percent of the violence in the black community is by blacks against blacks. If clues as to the causes of violence can be found in brain structure and neurotransmitter systems, then these studies would primarily benefit the black community.

Crime prevention programs including pre and posnatal care, early help for under-weight infants, well baby clinics, nutritional programs, neurological examinations for brain injuries, examinations for lead contamination in children, examinations for learning disabilities and hyperactivity, and other public health projects, would be of great value to the black community, but research is necessary for their development. It might be better to invest our dollars in these programs rather than in building dozens of new prisons. The cancellation of the conference did not help much to reduce the crime rate in this country.

Note: Since the NIH conference was cancelled, two sessions on the topic have been scheduled by the American Association for the Advancement of Science, one for the 1993 meeting in Boston and one for the 1994 meeting in San Francisco. There is also a report that NIH is reconsidering support for the project. The scientific community is starting to respond to the issue of biology and crime and the suppression of research in this area.

ASC OFFICERS

Following the recent call for nomination of officers by the ASC Nominations Committee, the following slate of officers was approved by the ASC Executive Board for the 1993-1994 election.

President-Elect
Freda Adler, Rutgers University
Charles F. Wellford, University of Maryland

Vice President-Elect
Piers Beirne, University of Southern Maine
Merry A. Morash, Michigan State University

Executive Counselor
David Huizinga, University of Colorado, Boulder
Nancy Jurik, Arizona State University
Alan Lizotte, University of Albany, SUNY
Christy A. Visher, National Institute of Justice

In accordance with the ASC Constitution, this slate must now be presented to the ASC active membership. Active members may place additional candidates for each office on the ballot if such candidates receive nominations from two percent of the membership—37 nominations.

Active members may suggest additions to the slate if such additions are received by March 1, 1993. If any Active member receives the required percentage of nominations, his/her name will be placed on the ballot that will be submitted to the membership March 27, 1993.

Please forward your nominations by March 1 to the ASC Executive Office, 1314 Kinnear Road, Suite 212, Columbus, OH 43212.
AAAS SYMPOSIUM
February 14 -- Boston

ASC members in New England--and elsewhere--are encouraged to attend the 1993 American Association for the Advancement of Science's Annual Meeting in Boston. AAAS93 includes an ASC sponsored symposium entitled "Analyzing and Redirecting Criminal Careers." It will be presented on Sunday, February 14, 1993 from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the Hynes Convention Center in Boston. John Hagan will talk on Interventions in the Linkages of Work and Crime. Deborah Baskin will discuss the Criminal Careers of Violent Female Offenders. Albert Reiss has been invited to present Preliminary Results of a Large Scale Prospective Study of Criminal Careers. Jacqueline Cohen will talk about Linking Official Records and Self-reports, and Alfred Blumstein will consider the Implications of Criminal Career Research for Incarceration Policies. Jerome Miller and Delbert Elliott will speak as discussants. The symposium will be chaired by Roland Chilton, ASC Representative to the AAAS.

CALL FOR BOOK REVIEWS AND REVIEWERS
THE CRIMINOLOGIST

Beginning with this issue, The Criminologist will publish book reviews. While this feature will change as it evolves over the next few months, our initial preference is to publish only one or two review essays per issue (up to 1,500 words) and several relatively short reviews of individual books (less than 750 words). Readers interested in serving as reviewers are encouraged to send a letter to the co-editors indicating their fields of expertise. Send correspondence to the following address:

Editors
The Criminologist
College of Criminal Justice
Sam Houston State University
Huntsville, TX 77341-2296

Book authors are also encouraged to have their publishers send copies of their new books to the above address. The more books we receive, the faster our review section can grow.

CALL FOR NOMINATIONS
1993 OUTSTANDING SCHOLARSHIP AWARD
Crime and Delinquency Division
Society for the Study of Social Problems

Each year the Crime and Delinquency Division of the Society for the Study of Social Problems reviews published works in the field to determine if there is one whose merit deserves the Division's award for Outstanding Scholarship. Nominations are now invited for the 1993 Outstanding Scholarship Award. This award is given to an author whose work makes a significant contribution to the sociological understanding of crime and/or delinquency.

If you know of a published work that you feel should be considered for this award, please complete the form below and mail or fax it to:

Claire M. Renzetti
Department of Sociology
St. Joseph's University
Philadelphia, PA 19131
FAX: 215-660-1668

Please include the author(s) name(s), the title of the work, the publisher, the publication date, and a brief statement of why you believe this work deserves the Outstanding Scholarship Award.

THE DEADLINE FOR NOMINATIONS IS APRIL 1, 1993
CALL FOR PAPERS
VOLUME 6: LEGACY OF ANOMIE
VOLUME 7: THEORETICAL DELIBERATIONS

ADVANCES IN CRIMINOLOGICAL THEORY

Volume 6

Advances in Criminological Theory is a forum for the publication of work on theory construction and validation in criminology. Papers are now being accepted for Volumes 6 and 7. Contributions should appear in the form of theoretical deliberations, theory construction, and efforts to test the validity and reliability of theories of crime and criminality. Articles under consideration will receive blind peer review. Thus, contributions must be submitted in triplicate, and for purposes of uniformity conform to the publication manual of the American Psychological Association.

CALL FOR PAPERS

ANNUAL MEETING TO BE HELD

The Law and Society Association has issued a Call for Participation for its 1993 Annual Meeting to be held May 27-30 at the Stouffer Riviere in Chicago, Illinois. The theme of the meeting is “Culture and Inequality.” Invited are proposals for papers, panels, or workshop participation. Due date: December 20, 1992 (later submissions considered on space available basis). For a copy of the Call contact: Executive Offices, Law and Society Association, Hampshire House, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts 01003 (413-545-4617; fax 413-545-1640, e-mail: LSA@UMass.binnet).

SPECIAL ISSUE ON RACE AND PUNISHMENT

The Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency invites original manuscripts that examine the relationships between “Race and Punishment.” Manuscripts are welcome that present original empirical or theoretical research, analyses of law and/or legal theory, or historical studies. Critical overviews of theory and methodology also are welcome. All manuscripts will be subject to the Journal’s peer review process. The standard submission requirements for JRCD apply to the special issue. The closing date for receipt of manuscripts is April 1, 1993. Please send four copies of the manuscript to: Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency, School of Criminal Justice, S.I. Newhouse Center for Law and Justice, 15 Washington Street, Newark, N.J. 07102, ATTN: Todd R. Clear.

LAW AND SOCIETY ASSOCIATION WORKSHOP FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS

For the seventh year, the Law and Society Association is pleased to announce a Workshop for Graduate Students that is designed to highlight interdisciplinary scholarly perspectives on law, legal process, and law and society along with more practical issues facing graduate students. The Workshop will be held on May 25-26, 1993 immediately preceding the LSA Annual Meeting in Chicago.

Applications are now being solicited from graduate students working toward a PhD and law students (candidates for JD, LLM, SJD) interested in an academic career. The workshop is limited to about 40 students. Applications from interested students should be received by February 15, 1993. The application consists of a curriculum vitae, a 1-2 page letter that includes year and current status in graduate program, a summary of dissertation and/or other research interests, and a very brief description of current or future teaching interests. Send FOUR COPIES of complete application to: Dr. Kitty Calavita, Chair, 1993 Graduate Student Workshops; c/o Executive Office, Law and Society Association; Hampshire House; University of Massachusetts; Amherst, MA 01003.

Each student who is accepted will receive up to $200.00 to help defray costs of attendance.
MICHAEL J. HINDELANG AWARD

The American society of Criminology has established the Michael J. Hindelang Award, to be given annually to the book published during the previous two to three years that makes the most outstanding contribution to criminology. The Award shall be presented during the annual meeting of the Society. The Executive Board may decide not to give the Award in a given year. The guidelines for this Award provide that the Editorial Board of the Society has the responsibility of gathering nominations and making recommendations for this Award to the Executive Board.

The Award Committee is soliciting nominations for the Hindelang Award. If you wish to offer a nomination, please send the title of the book, its author(s), and a brief statement indicating the basis of your recommendation, to the Committee. The deadline for receiving nominations is April 15, 1993. Send nominations to:

Law and Social Science Program
National Science Foundation

Proposal Submission Target Dates: January 15 and August 15

The Law and Social Science Program at the National Science Foundation supports social scientific studies of law and law-like systems of rules. These can include, but are not limited to research designed to enhance the scientific understanding of the impact of law; human behavior and interaction as these relate to law; the dynamics of legal decisionmaking; and the nature, sources, and consequences of variations and changes in legal institutions. The primary consideration is that the research show promise of advancing a scientific understanding of law and legal process. Within this framework, the Program has an “open window” for diverse theoretical perspectives, methods, and contexts for study. For example, research on social control, crime causation, violence, victimization, legal and social change, patterns of discretion, procedural justice, compliance and deterrence, and regulatory enforcement are among the many areas that have recently received program support.

The review process for the Law and Social Science Program takes approximately six months. It includes appraisal of proposals by ad hoc reviewers selected for their expertise from throughout the social scientific community and by an advisory panel that meets twice a year. The target dates for the submission of proposals are January 15 for proposals to be funded as early as July, and August 15 for proposals to be funded on or after January. CALL FOR ITEMS CONCERNING TEACHING, RESEARCH AND SERVICE NEWS COLUMNS

We plan to publish at irregular intervals three columns concerning teaching, research and service news, respectively. The aim of these columns is to make available to readers information that is of use to them in their daily work but may not be easily accessible. Suggestions for items to be published include, but are not limited to the following:

- Reviews of software packages to be used in teaching or research.
- Very brief notes on teaching aids and techniques (less than 250 words).
- Description of data files that have not yet been fully used for research.
- Opportunities for service to community, state or the profession.

1993 ASC MEETING

The 1993 Program Committee has incorporated several innovations in the ASC Annual Meetings to be held at the Hyatt and OMNI Hotels in Phoenix, Arizona, during October 27-October 30, 1993. Early morning breakfast meetings will feature stimulating keynote speakers and roundtable discussions; breakfast meetings will be limited to 100 participants each day. Reservation forms for these meetings will be included in the advance registration packets.

Plenary meetings are planned for the latest afternoon sessions. Plans for social events to follow the plenary sessions early each evening are in progress. A blue-grass and jazz concert with proceeds going to the Minority Scholarship Fund is tentatively scheduled for October 28 at 10 p.m.

In cooperation with the Local Arrangements Committee, the Program Committee will facilitate arrangements for participants with special needs. ASC members who are hearing-impaired are encouraged to contact the ASC Office in advance for American Sign Language assistance or other arrangements, as are members with other special needs.

March 15, 1993 has been set as an absolute deadline for submitting presentations or panels. While in past years submissions were accepted past the date of the announced deadline, the March 15th date will be firm for the following reasons. This year's Annual Meeting will begin on October 27, 1993; this is earlier than in past years. Also, the Committee would like to encourage presentations based on substantive findings from at least several months of ongoing research and to discourage presentations based on research which is too preliminary to have yielded any results. Finally, this deadline will help participants make travel plans by allowing production of the preliminary program plan several months in advance of the meetings.

Opportunities to formally participate in the Annual Meeting as a Roundtable Discussion Leader or Roundtable Discussion Invited Participant will be available for some ASC members who have not submitted a proposal for a presentation or panel by March 15, 1993. However, the Committee would like to urge members to send a formal submission to an appropriate Division Chair listed in the 1993 ASC Call for Papers by that date. Copies of the Call for Papers can be obtained directly from Sarah Hall at ASC (614) 292-9207; fax (614) 292-6767.

Box 238, Middle Tennessee State University, Murfreesboro, TN 37132. Women and minorities are encouraged to apply. MTSU is an affirmative action/equal opportunity employer.

Brown University. Center for Alcohol and Addiction Studies offers two year post-doctoral fellowships for research relating to early intervention and treatment of alcohol abuse and alcoholism. The program is multidisciplinary in nature and emphasizes the importance of biological, social, cultural, and environmental factors. Focus is placed on the development and testing of theories of treatment and intervention as well as methods for measuring relevant variables. Stipends are $18,600-$32,300 per year plus a travel allowance and health benefits. Research funds are also available for related projects. This program is funded by NIAAA. Appointments begin between June and September 1993. For further information and application write to: Dr. Richard Longabaugh, Center for Alcohol and Addiction Studies, Brown University, Providence, RI 02912. Application deadline: February 15, 1993. An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

Old Dominion University. The Department of Sociology and Criminal Justice is seeking applications for one full-time tenure-track position at the Assistant Professor level beginning August 1, 1993. The Ph.D. or ABD in Criminal Justice, Criminology or Sociology required. Areas of research specialization are open. Teaching responsibilities will include criminological theory; other areas of teaching interest open. Applicants who bring minor, feminist, or international perspectives to their teaching and research are especially encouraged to apply. Opportunities exist for participation in the Department’s Applied Sociology Master’s Program as well as the University’s Institute for the Study of Minority Issues, the Women’s Studies Program and the Graduate Programs in International Studies. A letter of application, curriculum vitae, samples of written work, and three letters of reference should be sent to Janet Katz, Chair, Recruitment Committee, Department of Sociology and Criminal Justice, Old Dominion University, Norfolk, Virginia 23529-0090. Minorities and women are encouraged to apply. Application review will begin January 15, 1993 and continue until the position is filled. Old Dominion University is an affirmative action, equal opportunity employer and required compliance with the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986.
Central Michigan University, Department of Sociology, Anthropology, and Social Work, invites applications for a tenure-track position in sociology at the rank of Assistant Professor beginning Fall, 1993. Candidates should provide evidence of teaching effectiveness and research promise in the areas of social work and juvenile justice. Preference will be given to candidates who have applied and research expertise in the area of services to children/youth. The successful applicant will serve in a multidisciplinary department offering the sociology major with concentration in both social work and criminal justice. The PhD in sociology, social work, criminal justice/criminology, or anthropology must be completed prior to date of appointment; the candidate must also have a MSW or advanced degree in social work; the candidate must also have three letters of reference by January 15 to Mary S. Senter, Chair, Personnel Committee, Department of Sociology, Anthropology, and Social Work, Central Michigan University, Mt. Pleasant, MI 48859. RESEARCH NEWS

The Social Science Research Council (SSRC) is pleased to announce the availability of the Urban Underclass Database, a consolidated public use database containing a wide range of measures on poverty, employment, health, crime and related indicators in the nation's 100 largest cities. The database is sponsored by the Council's Committee for Research on the Urban Underclass with funds provided by the Rockefeller Foundation.

The Urban Underclass Database was designed by sociologist John D. Kasarda of the University of North Carolina. It is a panel study with data over a 30 year period, and contains some 5,800 economic, social, demographic, crime and health indicators for metropolitan central cities and their poverty subareas.

For additional information, contact Andrea Bohlig, Technical Research Specialist, Kenan Institute of Private Enterprise, Kenan Center, CB# 3440, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Chapel Hill, NC 27599-3440, (919) 962-8201.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1993 ASC AWARDS

The ASC Awards Committee invites nominations for four major awards, to be presented at the 1993 annual meetings. The awards are:

EDWINH. SUTHERLAND AWARD, which recognizes outstanding scholarly contributions to the discipline of criminology by a North American criminologist. Outstanding scholarly contributions may consist of a single outstanding book or work, a series of theoretical or research contributions, or the accumulated contributions of a senior scholar.

THORSTEN SELLIN & SHELDON AND ELEANOR GLUECK AWARD, which recognizes outstanding scholarly contributions to the discipline of criminology by a non-North American criminologist (i.e., not U.S. or Canadian). The recipient need not speak English; however, his/her work must be available, in part at least, in the English language (either by original publication or through translation).

AUGUST VOLLMER AWARD, which recognizes outstanding contributions to applied criminology (criminological practice or policy). The award may be given for a single major effort or work, a series of contributions, or accumulated contributions to practice of policy.

HERBERT BLOCH AWARD, which recognizes outstanding service contributions to the American Society of Criminology and to the professional interests of criminology.

In submitting your nomination, provide the following supporting materials: a letter evaluating a nominee's contribution and its relevance to an award, and the nominee's c.v. (short version preferred). Send nominations and supporting materials by February 25, 1993 to the committee chair:

Quantitative Analysis of Crime and Criminal Justice Seminar

Part of the ICPSR Summer Program, this four-week seminar will introduce participants to the major surveys sponsored by the Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS), which are part of the holdings of the ICPSR National Archive of Criminal Justice Data. Through daily class meetings, instructor James P. Lynch, associate professor at American University, will focus on current theories and models being employed in criminal justice research. Computer-aided data analysis will be an integral part of the seminar. Participants will become familiar with studies that have used BJS data to address important issues in criminology. Enrollment will be limited to ten, and preference will be given to postdoctoral scholars who have prior methodological training. Applicants must show evidence of an intellectual interest and commitment to this substantive area and should include vita with their applications. Stipend support for those admitted will be provided by BJS.

Seminar dates:
July 26–Aug. 20, 1993

Sponsored by the Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS)

The ICPSR Summer Program in Quantitative Methods of Social Research offers the academic community a comprehensive, integrated program of studies in research design, statistics, data analysis, and methodological issues. The program is divided into two four-week sessions: administrative organization organized in lectures, seminars, and workshop formats. Typical four-week topics include offerings on Dynamic and Longitudinal Analysis, Regression Analysis, Dimensional Analysis, Series, Analysis of Variance, LISREL Applications, Categorical Analysis, and Rational Choice in Conflict. Special workshops oriented toward specific topics not offered in the curriculum. These include Historical Analysis of Research Issues, Using the 1990 Census, and The Study of Aging. Also, one-week workshops are conducted on advanced topics such as Logit and Log-Linear Models, Management of MachineReadable Information, and Item Response/Measurement Theory.

Violent Men: An Inquiry Into the Psychology of Violence

Violent Men explores the innermost perceptions, assumptions, attitudes, and motives of men who are violent. It is concerned with individuals who have recurrently done physical harm to other people, and who can be said to have a propensity for violent conduct.

This publication explores the continuity and patterning of violence in human behavior and personality, recurrent violence as a predictor of future violence, and the repetitively violent individuals who commit most of the violence we face on the streets of our cities. Revised and updated edition. 1992. Hans Toch, Author. 270 pages.

Living in Prison

Living in Prison offers a comprehensive inmate's view of prison life by describing how individual prisoners relate to and cope with their environment. Concerns such as privacy, safety, structure (stability of the environment), support (prison programs), feedback (outside ties), activity, and freedom are discussed.

BOOK REVIEW

Reviewed by MARK JONES
Sam Houston State University

Prison crowding has driven the creation and/or repackaging of several intermediate sanctions, such as intensive supervision, electronic monitoring, house arrest, boot camps and residential treatment centers. The first major contribution to the study of this resurgent field was McCarthy's edited volume Intermediate Punishments; the second was Morris and Tony's Between Prison and Probation, and the third is Byrne, Lurigio and Petersilia's edited volume Smart Sentencing: The Emergence of Intermediate Sanctions. Some edited volumes are collections of previously published articles. Although these books are useful as texts or ready references, they contribute nothing new to the knowledge base. In contrast, Smart Sentencing includes previously unpublished works from some renowned authorities on intermediate sanctions. The book is aimed at academics and correctional administrators who desire a better understanding of intermediate sanctions. In concert with that aim, the contributors keep the use of complex inferential statistics to a minimum, instead relying on descriptive methods of measuring diversion and cost savings. Some complex questions such as net-widening and diversionary impact cannot be fully addressed without using advanced inferential techniques, but the contributors make good use of simple descriptive measures in assessing cost benefits and recidivism. Just as important, almost all of the articles lay conceptual and theoretical foundations for a particular sanction, something frequently neglected by in-house correctional researchers and administrators.

ABOUT UNCJIN

The United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network, formerly available only on the DIALCOM system, is now available as a list server over INTERNET.

UNCJIN serves the international community of criminal justice by enhancing the exchange of information among professionals and scholars. UNCJIN provides latest reports of research and activities from the main United Nations Institutes around the world, an international calendar of events and meetings, legislative and court activities updates, and United Nations World Crime Survey data. A number of directories of criminal justice institutes around the world are also available, plus lists of other criminal justice bulletin boards. The calendar and other updates are automatically sent to list subscribers. We also publish electronically a selection of U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics reports before they become available in hard copy. The access lists of leading criminal justice libraries are also published from time to time. The table of contents of forthcoming issues of criminal justice journals, before they are published in hard copy, are sent to all list subscribers.

Subscribers may search the UNCJIN-L data files for information on World Crime Surveys, U.N. Resolutions concerning Criminal Justice, and much more. These files may be retrieved and downloaded.

UNCJIN has been in operation since 1988 and is funded, in part, by the U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics, and operates under the auspices of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, Vienna International Center, Austria.

The book includes twenty articles, divided into six areas: (1) intensive probation supervision, (2) home confinement and electronic monitoring, (3) shock incarceration, (4) other intermediate sanctions, (5) issues and controversy, and (6) a look at the future. Section one includes two articles, one by Lurigio and Petersilia which lays a theoretical foundation for ISP programs, including a discussion of the shifting emphasis of ISP, in concert with Feeley and Simon's (1992) "New Penology" idea, they state that some programs are viewing revocations, previously considered failures, as testaments to the success of ISP's ability to catch violators. In the second article, Petersilia, Turner, and Deschenes discuss another emerging function of ISP: treating special need offenders, in this case, drug offenders. In addition to the jurisdictions mentioned by Petersilia et al., similar programs have been implemented in other locations, most notably in San Diego (Curtis et al., 1992).

Most of the articles in section two discuss the advantages and disadvantages of electronic monitoring systems, primarily in terms of recidivism versus success, along with some of the logistical and administrative obstacles to implementing such a program. The most stimulating contribution is Corbett and Marx's "Emerging Technofallacies" articles, which outlines ten potential pitfalls of electronic monitoring. Corbett and Marx do what Smart Sentencing does best, provide a theoretical and historical perspective on intermediate punishments that is too often ignored by administrators and policy makers.

In section three, MacKenzie and Parent provide a generic description of boot camps in general, including their purpose, goals, and day-to-day operations. The authors point to the success of boot camp programs, but primarily in hypothetical fashion. Based on empirical findings, they also note that to date, boot camps do not appear to be succeeding from the standpoint of recidivism or cost savings.

Section three includes discussions of a variety of sanctions, including an article by Cole on the enforceability of monetary sanctions. This relates to the problem all too often found in many criminal justice programs; many programs and policies appear promising in the conceptual stage, but fail because practitioners assign them a low priority or do not take them seriously. Parent's article on Day Reporting Centers is the sole contribution to Smart Sentencing that outlines a relatively untried sanction. DRC's are so infrequently utilized that many administrators and academics no doubt have never heard of it. Hopefully, Parent's article can be a catalyst toward further exploration of DRC's.

Section five includes von Hirsch's rejection of Morris and Tonry's (1990) call for an interchangeability of equivalent sanctions, proposing instead a desert-based model. One of the most significant contributions is Palumbo, Clifford, and Synder-Joy's article on net-widening. They argue, fairly convincingly, that political influences, which pervade the initial structuring of intermediate sanctions, have effectively made true diversion impossible. As diversion suffers, so does cost effectiveness. A compelling argument against increased utilization of punitive intermediate sanctions, and for the increased use of regular probation and non-supervisory sanctions, is made by Byrne and Pattavina. In accordance with some previous research (Petersilia and Turner, 1990), they conclude that the treatment aspect of intermediate sanctions must not be neglected.

Section six includes an article by Clear and Byrne on future questions to consider. Quite often, one can look to the last statement in a book or article to find exactly what point the author is attempting to make. This article is no exception, as Clear and Byrne state that it remains to be seen whether or not intermediate sanctions cannot move beyond retributive rhetoric toward effectiveness in controlling offenders in the community.

Some of the previous research and writings on intermediate sanctions question whether or not these programs would survive. As Clear and Byrne state, the survivability of such programs is no longer in doubt, asserting that the 1990s will be known as the decade of the intermediate sanction. Through evaluation research, these scholars are now assessing what role intermediate sanction has in a "smart sentencing" system. Dr. Byrne stated at the 1992 ASC Conference that in recent history, corrections has gone from an "everything works" phase (during the 1950s, when the rehabilitative ideal enjoyed its greatest popularity), to a "nothing works" phase, to a "something works" phase. He also said that the task for policy makers and researchers lies in discovering what that "something" is. In other words, intermediate sanctions are not devoid of utilitarian value, but they are not panaceas either. So an essential question remains unanswered: Exactly what should we expect from intermediate sanctions? Smart Sentencing's editors note in the introduction that no program should be expected to insure cost savings, relieve institutional crowding, protect the community, and deter offenders with a great degree of...asystency. But they also note that the first step in developing a rational sentencing structure is to develop an array of sentencing options, discover what each of those options can accomplish, and find out who may benefit from them.

Data Resources Program

announces its
FIRST ANNUAL WORKSHOP
on criminal justice data:

“Focus on Recidivism”

This one-week workshop will provide a forum for the discussion of methodological issues related to the analysis of criminal justice recidivism data and introduce researchers to the criminal justice data deposited with the National Archive of Criminal Justice Data housed at the Inter-university Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR). The workshop will be devoted to the discussion of limitations in recidivism data and methodological approaches to the analysis of recidivism. Additional sessions will familiarize participants with the contents, characteristics, and research potential of selected datasets that incorporate recidivism outcome measures.

Social scientists and policy analysts from academia, nonprofit organizations, and government agencies will be considered for this workshop. Enrollment will be limited to twenty participants and preference will be given to individuals with prior methodological training. Applicants must show evidence of an intellectual interest and commitment to this substantive area. The National Institute of Justice will provide stipend support to offset airfare and per-diem costs in the amount of $1,000 for admitted participants. This workshop is offered as part of the ICPSR Summer Program in Quantitative Methods.

OBITUARY

John P. Conrad
(1913-1992)

John P. Conrad, a major contributor to criminology and corrections, died suddenly on October 10, 1992. He was 79.

Essayist, academic, researcher and administrator, John was most concerned with penal policy and practice—the limits of deterrence and incapacitation strategies, the death penalty, "dangerousness" and career violence, system equity, and the just treatment of offenders. His many "think pieces" offered a vision of a more rational and humane criminal justice system. John led a satisfying, meaningful and productive life. He will be remembered not only for his scholarship but as a caring, modest, decent, principled human being.

John grew up in an academic, achievement oriented family. His father was Associate Dean of Students and Director of Secondary Education Training at the University of California-Berkeley. (Both parents had been valedictorians of their respective graduating classes at UC-Berkeley.) John attended primary and secondary school in Berkeley. At age 16, he managed to get a summer job working in the ship's mess on a salmon fishing boat out of Alaska. Most of the crewmen were illiterate and John became their "designated" letter writer. In 1934, not a good year by any standard, he graduated from the University of California with a degree in political science. Graduate work followed at the University of Chicago where he received his Master's Degree in Social Service Administration. While marginal to the department of sociology, he always considered himself part of the great Chicago sociological tradition.

John's first post-college position was with a child service agency in Peoria, Illinois, where he met and married his life's partner, Charlotte, a co-worker in the agency. War soon overtook career and family and he found himself in the Army and eventually in the Pacific theater (anti-aircraft artillery and later intelligence). He entered as a private, was a Captain at discharge in 1946 and became a Major in the Reserves. While stationed on Fiji, and ever the educator, he initiated a daily radio news broadcast. Returning to California after the war, he took a job as a parole officer with the California Youth Authority, moved to the Veterans Administration as a psychiatric social worker, and back to corrections as a "senior sociologist" (an archaic title for an institutional parole officer and actuary) at San Quentin and Soledad. The six years at San Quentin and Soledad were crucial ones. They shaped his perspective on corrections. He later peppered his essays with inmates like Stephen Nash (a pseudonym, of course), "a sadly amiable clown," in John's words, who strangled 17 skid-row men after flattening out his ten years for grand larceny. On death row, Nash took great delight in describing minute details of these killings to anyone who would listen. (It was not long before no one would.) John's next five years were spent as a supervising parole officer, and as supervisor of inmate classification, both in the Department of Corrections in Sacramento.

John had logged more than 12 years in these various middle management positions in central office and in the field when his career took an unexpected turn. In 1958, at age 45, he was awarded a Fulbright Fellowship to study at the London School of Economics. On his return, he was appointed Associate Director (later Director) of the International Survey of Corrections for the American Justice Institute (1960-62). With the completion of the Survey, he was appointed Chief of Research of the California Department of Corrections (1963-67). And like the San Quentin and Soledad period, these were defining years—he had become a researcher, a research administrator and a policy planner. In the process, he developed a close personal and professional relationship with Richard McGee, whose progressive leadership as Director of Corrections made the California system a model to be emulated. (At the time of his death, John was preparing to write a biography of Richard McGee.) So close was their relationship, that John once told me, back in the 1970s, that he and McGee were considering pooling their resources to buy a jumbo, high yield, certificate of deposit.

There followed four, nearly five, exciting years as Chief of Research of the U.S. Bureau of Prisons and as Chief, Center for Crime Prevention and Rehabilitation of the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice (NILECJ). These jobs were at the center of things and there was the opportunity of influencing policy and practice. There was also a bonus. Occasional uncommitted lunchtimes could be spent in the nearby National Art Gallery.

In 1972, the Conrads moved to Columbus, Ohio, where John became a Senior Fellow in the Academy of Contemporary Problems, a social research center founded by Battelle
Memorial Institute and Ohio State University. His mission was to create a small, high quality criminal justice research section in the Academy—a task at which he succeeded admirably. It was during his seven years at the Academy that we became co-principals of the Dangerous Offender Project and later co-authored four books in the series. John produced the final volume and our associates published two more. John was also appointed Adjunct Professor in Sociology and we co-taught several seminars. Not only that! John caught the fever and became a committed Ohio State football fan.

At age 65, John "retired" to the American Justice Institute in Sacramento as a senior program officer (1979-81). This was followed by a stint as the George J. Beto Professor at Sam Houston State University, as Visiting Fellow at the National Institute of Justice and as a Visiting Professor at Simon Fraser University.

Over the years, John produced 12 books, over 90 articles, and a stream of reports, monographs and essays including the more than 60 which appeared in Federal Probation Quarterly under the title, "News of the Future." He authored or co-authored: Crime and Its Correction (1965); (with Edith Flynn) The New and Old Criminology (1978); The Evolution of Criminal Justice (1978); Justice and Consequences (1981); (with Ernest van den Haag) The Death Penalty: Pro and Con (1983); and The United Nations: In or Out? (1987).

The Dangerous Offender Series books are: (with Simon Dinitz) In Fear of Each Other (1977); (with Donna Hamparian, Richard Schuster and Simon Dinitz) The Violent Few (1978); (with Stephen Van Dine and Simon Dinitz) Restraining the Wicker (1979); (with Stuart Miller and Simon Dinitz) Careers of the Violent (1982); and The Dangerous and the Endangered (1985). John's most recent publication was a textbook: (with Clemens Bartollos) Introduction to Corrections (1992).

Impressive as is this resume, it fails to tell the story of his activities as visiting expert, here and abroad (UN Asia and Far Eastern Institute in Fuchu, Japan, for example), as expert witness in "conditions of confinement litigation," as member of court decree implementation committees (Alabama, 1983-89), of task forces, as university lecturer (US-Davis, University of Pennsylvania) and as Chief Editor of the Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency (1975-77) and a contributing editor, since 1977, to Federal Probation Quarterly.

In appreciation, John Conrad received the Distinguished Alumnus Award of the School of Social Service Administration of the University of Chicago in 1980. The Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences gave him its Bruce Smith Award for Outstanding Contributions to Criminal Justice in 1983.

John had many interests and hobbies--travel, photography--but nothing came close to his interest in reading. He took pleasure in the densest philosophy tomes, the classics and the works of the social contract and Enlightenment thinkers. On trips, he carried an oversized, shopworn attache case which contained nothing but books, magazines and journals. At the first opportunity, he started reading--his index finger racing down the left margin of each page at breakneck speed. He could finish a periodical even before we left the lounge to board the plane. At first I doubted that he could comprehend much from this exercise but soon discovered that he knew the contents as well as I did. It was the same with his writing--quick, graceful, effortless.

John had a passion for ideas, words, meaning. He loved informed discussions, debates (see his work with van den Haag), the exchange and critique of reasoned positions. He disliked the modern social science passion for quantification which he called "scientism," for the mindless manipulation of meaningless data, for small questions and even smaller answers. He could be a cranky critic, a tough editor, a rigid grammarian and a stylistic purist. But to his credit, he allowed neither ideological nor methodological differences nor ascriptive characteristics to color his personal relationships.

John's passing leaves a void in the lives of those fortunate enough to know him along the way. He is survived by his wife, three married children and eight grandchildren. He will be remembered by them, by his colleagues and friends, and by those who value intellect, commitment to social justice and faith in the power of human reason. He was a rare and good man. He will be missed.
