W.E.B. Du Bois on Crime: American Conflict Theorist

Shaun L. Gabbidon
Coppin State College

Editor's note: This essay is part two of a series on W.E.B. Du Bois and his place as a criminologist (see Vol. 23, No. 6). In the second part of this series the author makes an argument for viewing Du Bois as a conflict theorist. This argument is made by comparing the elements of the conflict theory in Du Bois's (1901) piece on the convict-lease system and Chambliss's (1964) piece of the law of vagrancy in Europe.

Following the publication of his seminal work, The Philadelphia Negro: A Social Study (1899), Du Bois, in 1901 directed his scholastic focus to an analysis of the convict-lease system. Of the system Du Bois stated, "[t]he convict-lease system is the slavery in private hands of persons convicted of crimes and misdemeanors in the courts" (Du Bois, 1901:110). The context in which Du Bois discusses the convict-lease system underscores one of his earliest identities as a conflict criminologist. Du Bois prefaced an enlarged discussion of the system with a historical analysis of the punishment of criminals before and after the Civil War.

Du Bois began his analysis noting that before the Civil War the punishments in the South were the same as in the North. He added that in the South, however, crime was less prevalent. This was a direct result of the system of slavery, primarily because slaves could not be criminals under the law and the master was often the police, judge and jury (Du Bois, 1901:110).

In addition, Du Bois reported that during the slave era there was often cooperation among masters to control the slaves. This was deemed necessary because of rampant fear, which was heightened because of the fear of insurrections, such as the ones by Cato, Gabriel, Vesey, Turner, and Toussaint (Du Bois, 1901:110). Because of these fears, Du Bois noted, "the result was a system of rural police, mounted and on duty chiefly at night, whose work it was to stop the nocturnal wandering and meeting of slaves. It was usually an effective organization, which all white men belonged, and were liable to active detailed duty at regular intervals" (1901:110-111).

After emancipation, Du Bois noted that the South was determined to retain slave labor (1901:111). To do this, the South enacted, "[e]laborate and ingenious apprentice and vagrancy laws [Black Codes] ... passed, designed to make the freedmen and their children work for their former masters at practically no wages" (Du Bois, 1901:111). This practice was gradually slowed after the development of the Freedmen Bureau and other government interventions. However, even after these measures, Du Bois observed that the "careless and untrained Negroes" still received severe sentences (1901:111). Du Bois, discussing this period, stated, "[t]he courts and jails became filled with the careless and ignorant, with those who sought to emphasize their new-found freedom, and too often with innocent victims of oppression. The testimony of a Negro counted for nothing in court, while the accusation of white witnesses was usually decisive" (1901:111).

This increase in the prison population exceeded the space allocated to maintain criminals. Du Bois argued that the state had no intention of housing these offenders. Soon later, the southern states passed laws authorizing the lease of convict labor to the highest bidder (Du Bois, 1901:112). The lessee then worked the convict, with little or no intervention from the state. With the emergence of the convict-lease system, Du Bois commented, "thus a new slavery and slave-trade was established" (1901:112).

Once established, Du Bois tells how, innocent, guilty, and "depraved men, women and children were turned over to irresponsible men who were out to make as much as possible" (1901:112). Because of this system, Du Bois believed that the "innocent were made bad, the bad worse; women were outraged and children tainted; whipping and torture were in vogue, and the death-rate from cruelty, exposure, and overwork rose to larger percentages" (1901:112).

Additionally, Du Bois noted that there was such limited shelter that in one case sixty-one men slept in one room. Du Bois felt that because of the government involvement in this system, "the state became a dealer in crime, profited by it so as to derive a net annual income for her prisoners. The lessees of the convicts made large profits also" (1901:112). Du Bois was most concerned with the chain-gangs because he felt they were "schools of crime" which led to the advent of the serious Negro criminal (Du Bois, 1901:113). Du Bois noted the irony of the development of this Negro criminal because whites had long used the criminal courts to put Negroes to work by conviction of petty stealing and other minor crimes; however, they were not ready for the more bold and violent crimes (1901:113). Du Bois recognized that there had been

The American Statistical Association (ASA) Committee on Law and Justice Statistics announces a small grant program for the analysis of Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS) data. This program is designed to encourage the creative and appropriate use of these data to inform substantive and methodological issues. The maximum amount of each award will be $22,000 over either a one or two year period. For further information, see the ASA Home Page at www.amstat.org.

Mark Colvin, associate professor of sociology at George Mason University, was interviewed by the BBC for a documentary film on prisons. A one-hour segment of this six-hour documentary focuses on the dilemmas of control in prisons and is based partly on Colvin's book, The Penitentiary in Crisis (SUNY Press, 1992).

improvements in the conditions of the system, but the system was kept intact through tighter state control. This simply meant that the prison labor was still leased, under heavier state regulation, by contractors or to conduct work for the state (Du Bois, 1901:114).

Du Bois agreed with the principle of having prisoners work, but his reasons were different—"[t]he correct theory is that the work is for the benefit of the criminal -- for his correction, if possible. At the same time, his work should not be allowed to come into unfair competition with that of honest laborers, and it should never be an object of traffic for purely financial gain" (1901:114-5).

Du Bois and Chambliss

A close examination of Du Bois's analysis of the convict-lease system reveals a similarity with that of William Chambliss's 1964 analysis of the law of vagrancy in 19th-century England. Chambliss, discussing the transformation of vagrancy laws noted that, during 1274, there was an existing law of vagrancy which was "solely designed to provide the religious houses with some financial relief from the burden of providing food and shelter to travelers" (Chambliss, 1964:52). However, this law was changed in 1349 which "made it a crime to give alms to any who were unemployed while being of sound body and mind" (Chambliss, 1964:52).

Chambliss noted that the change in the law was a strategic one. The plague had recently decimated England in 1348 and Chambliss notes, "...the vast mortality that ensued destroyed that reserve of labour..." (1964:54). Because of this circumstance, there was an immense need for labor and subsequently free laborers increased their wage demands; however, the serf was not able to benefit from the situation. Being fully aware of his circumstance, the serf knew that his best chance of better living would be to travel to another area which had potential.

This movement now had its risks with the passage of the new vagrancy laws, as evidenced by the following passage:

The anti-migratory policy behind vagrancy legislation began as an essential component of the wage stabilization legislation which accompanied the breakup of feudalism and the depopulation caused by the Black Death. By the statute of Labourers in 1349-1351, every able-bodied person without other means of support was required to work for wages fixed at the level preceding the Black Death; it was unlawful to accept more, or to refuse an offer to work, or to flee from one county to another to avoid offers of work or to seek higher wages, or give alms to able-bodied beggars who refuse to work (Caleb Feote as quoted in Chambliss, 1964:54).

Chambliss noted that the change in vagrancy law was a direct result of the change in social setting in England (1964:55). Of this change, Chambliss wrote:

The innovation in the law...was a direct result of the changes which had occurred in the social setting. In this case these changes were located for the most part in the economic institution of the society. The vagrancy laws were designed to alleviate a condition defined by the lawmakers as undesirable. The solution was to attempt to force a reversal, as it were, of a social process which was well underway; that is, to curtail mobility of laborers in such a way that labor would not become a commodity for which the landowners would have to compete (Chambliss, 1964:55).

Du Bois, writing about a similar massive loss of potential laborers (Negroes) because of emancipation, noted the enactment of the Black Codes and the subsequent convict-lease system by the Southern oligarchy to compensate for the lost labor and expectant profits. Du Bois, discussing this phenomenon, stated:

The South believed in slave labor, and was thoroughly convinced that free Negroes would not work steadily or effectively. The whites were determined after the war, therefore, to restore slavery in everything but in name. Elaborate and ingenuous apprentice and vagrancy laws were passed, designed to make the freedmen and their children work for their former masters at practically no wage. Some justification for these was found in the inevitable tendency of many of the ex-slaves to loaf when the fear of the lash was taken away. The new laws, however, went far beyond such justification, totally ignoring that large class of freedmen eager to work and own property of their own... (1901:111).

Because of the severe need for laborers, Du Bois also noted the court's involvement in the providing of laborers through its discriminatory decisions. This discussion is directly linked to another one of Du Bois's causal explanations for crime among Negroes, which was the attitude of the courts. Commenting on this issue, Du Bois noted:

As the regular state courts gradually regained power, it was necessary for them to fix by their decisions the new status of the freedmen. It was perhaps as natural as it was unfortunate that amid this chaos the courts sought to do by judicial decisions what the legislatures had formally sought to do by specific law -- namely, reduce the freedmen to servitude. As a result, the small pecuacillos of careless, untrained classes were made the excuse for severe sentences (Du Bois, 1901:111).

Du Bois felt the courts meted out two forms of justice. This consisted of whites and blacks receiving differing sentences for the same law violations. As noted before, this publication represents one of Du Bois's most theoretically relevant writings. These writings directly link Du Bois to the present classification as a conflict theorist. Lilly et al. (1995) provide a current definition of conflict theory:

Theories that focus attention on struggles between individuals and/or groups in terms of power differentials fall into the category of conflict theory... Some conflict theories try to search for the sources of the apparent conflicts. Some seek to elucidate the basic principles by which conflict evolves. Others try to develop a theoretical foundation for eliminating the conflict. Some try to do all this and more (132-3).

It is clear that Du Bois fits modern descriptors of a conflict theorist. Du Bois recognized that a labor conflict followed emancipation, leading to the timely passage of legislation to provide African-American labor at minimal cost to landholders through the crop-lens and convict-lease systems. Both systems often provided the means through which African-Americans were criminalized to secure the necessary labor for the aristocracy.

Discussion and Conclusion

After reading this essay, some will argue that it is an attempt to legitimize Du Bois's works by comparing them to that of a mainstream scholar, such as Chambliss. Du Bois's work needs no legitimation. Being trained at the same institutions as white scholars of his day, Du Bois's writings and analyses emanate from the same foundations as many of his contemporaries. Therefore, while this essay was meant to stimulate discourse in the discipline regarding Du Bois's place in the annals of American criminology, irrespective of the response or lack thereof, his work remains some of the earliest scientific research studies of crime in America. Unfortunately, however, Du Bois's views, much

ASC ANNUAL MEETING
Toronto, November 17-20, 1999

We hope that the 1999 Annual Meeting will be the most successful ever. More than 2,800 persons registered for the 1998 Annual Meeting, and more than 2,100 papers were presented. However, the increasing success of the Annual Meeting has caused great problems of scheduling papers. In Washington, DC, in 1998, sessions lasted from 7:50 am to 5:50 pm and panel sessions were curtailed to 80 minutes instead of the more usual 90 minutes. In Toronto, we would like to begin later and end earlier in the day, and return to 90 minute panel sessions.

The ASC Executive Board is convinced that the Annual Meeting should be as inclusive as possible and that all delegates should have the opportunity to present a paper. In an attempt to alleviate problems of scheduling papers, the Executive Board at its meeting in San Diego in 1997 resolved to change the traditional two-appearance rule as follows:

EACH PERSON CAN MAKE ONLY ONE PRESENTATION AS A FIRST AUTHOR AND ONE OTHER APPEARANCE AS A CHAIR OR DISCUSSANT. UNLIMITED SECOND OR SUBSEQUENT NON-PRESENTING AUTHORSHIPS ARE ALLOWED.

The Executive Board preferred to restrict each delegate to one first-author presentation in comparison with the alternative of setting up a system of refereeing and accepting and rejecting submitted papers. A refereeing system would inevitably limit the ability of students and lesser-known researchers to present their work at the Annual Meeting.

This rule take effect for the first time for the Toronto meeting in 1999. Consequently, please plan to give only ONE presentation as a first author and decline other invitations. Do not submit more than one paper with you listed as the first author. THIS RULE WILL BE ENFORCED.

Please note that the FIRM deadline for submissions is March 31, 1999. Late submissions will not be considered for panel sessions but will be organized into table sessions. No submissions will be accepted after July 1, 1999.

CALL FOR PAPERS

Toronto, Ontario Canada

November 17-20 Royal York Hotel

THEME: EXPLAINING AND PREVENTING CRIME:
THE GLOBALIZATION OF KNOWLEDGE

The 1999 Annual Meeting of the American Society of Criminology will be held at the Royal York Hotel from Wednesday, November 17 through Saturday, November 20.

The 1999 Program consists of five AREAS: 1) Explanations and Approaches, 2) Research Methods, 3) Criminality and Deviance, 4) Law Making, Policy and the Public, 5) Institutions of Social Control and Criminal Processing. Each AREA includes specific DIVISIONS within which we invite the submission of panels and papers.

Submission should be made to the CHAIR of the DIVISION you think most appropriate (DO NOT SUBMIT THE SAME PANEL OR THE SAME PAPER TO MORE THAN ONE DIVISION CHAIR). It is essential that EACH AUTHOR’S name, mailing address, telephone number, FAX number, and E-mail address be provided on panel submission forms, abstract forms, and abstracts. We will apply the new two appearance rule: ONLY ONE FIRST AUTHOR PRESENTATION and one other appearance as chair or discussant; unlimited appearances as co-author. Please limit your submissions and acceptance of invitations to participate to no more than two separate panels. Address questions about submission to the appropriate AREA CHAIR or Simon I. Singer, Program Chair.

ASC members willing to serve as session chairs or discussants should notify an appropriate Division Chair. Your willingness to serve is greatly appreciated, but it does not guarantee your program participation.

The FIRM DEADLINE for submission is March 31, 1999. LATE SUBMISSIONS should be submitted to Simon I. Singer. They will not be considered for panel sessions. Late submissions will be organized into “Table Sessions” in which groups of scholars present their papers to each other (and others who want to join the table). No submissions will be accepted after July 1, 1999.

SUBMISSION DETAILS

- Submissions must be received by March 31, 1999
- Please send your submission to just one DIVISION Chair. If the Chair decides another Division is more appropriate for your submission, your forms will be forwarded to the Chair of that Division: you will be notified of this change.
- Each participant is limited to one first author presentation and one other appearance as a chair or discussant.
- We suggest that a panel include not more than five paper presentations or four papers and a discussant.
- All paper or panel submissions must include an abstract. In submitting your abstract, please limit it to 200 words. The abstract should only briefly note the purpose, method, and the results of the study, or the general theme of the paper.
- Please note that the Meeting is in NOVEMBER. Program participants are expected to preregister for the meetings. Preregistration materials will be sent to you by September of 1999. Failure to preregister may result in the removal of a paper from the program.
- The meetings are Wednesday through Saturday. Participants should expect to be in attendance the entire time as we cannot guarantee any particular day and time for panel presentations.
- Please remember to submit only papers that are original and have not been published or presented elsewhere.

The 1999 Meeting will include panel sessions, table sessions, "author meets critic" sessions, thematic sessions, and plenary sessions. We welcome suggestions for any of the above as we strive to organize a program that cuts across criminology disciplines, professions and approaches.

We look forward to seeing you in Toronto.

NOMINATIONS FOR ASC FELLOWS

The ASC Fellows Committee invites nominations for Fellows in the Society. This title is available to those members of the Society in good standing who have achieved distinction in criminology. The last meeting of the ASC Executive Board approved the following clarification of this distinction: "The honorary title "Fellow" recognizes persons who have made a scholarly contribution to the intellectual life of the discipline, whether in the form of a singular, major piece of scholarship or cumulative scholarly contributions. Longevity alone is not sufficient. In addition, a Fellow must have made a significant contribution to the field through the career development of other criminologists and/or through organizational activities within the ASC."

The names of those who have been awarded the Fellow status will be announced at the 1999 Annual Meeting and the candidates will be acknowledged by the Society with the presentation of a Certificate.

In your nominating letter, please describe the reasons for your nomination and include a copy of the nominees curriculum vitae (or make arrangements to have it sent to the Committee). All materials should be received by March 1, 1999 to: like those of African-American criminologists today, were overlooked and/or unsolicited on topics of relevance to their own communities (see Young and Sutton, 1991; Ross and Edwards, 1998). One wonders how different the African-American community would be today if Du Bois's views on African-American crime had been considered during the early part of this century.

Interestingly, Du Bois may have been the founder of what Russell (1992) describes as "Black Criminology." In her article, Russell calls for the development of a "Black Criminology." A close examination of Du Bois writings (which is beyond the scope of this essay) clearly show the connection between what Russell calls for and what Du Bois did in his research on African-American crime. Du Bois's publications on crime began in the 1890s and continued into the 1950s. Admittedly, some of Du Bois's publications are more noteworthy than others, but they all suggest he had a serious interest in the subject (Du Bois wrote on crime-related topics including: slave-trade law violators, organized crime, urban crime, corporate crime, lynching). This interest probably came natural to Du Bois considering he lived through several cycles of the biological arguments regarding African-American criminality.

This essay set out to examine one of W.E.B. Du Bois's most theoretically relevant publications. It was found that Du Bois's discussion of the convict-lease system represents an early classic conflict/Marxist analysis. This finding concurs with previous analyses of Du Bois's writings and confirms that Du Bois was more than a minor contributor to the early development of American criminology. Although his writings have thus far been excluded from mainstream theoretical discussions, and/or publications, Du Bois's contributions remain important to the discipline. It is the author's firm belief that an accurate history of American criminology is incomplete without a discussion of W.E.B. Du Bois.

Dr. Shaun L. Gabidon is an assistant professor of Criminal Justice at Coppin State College in Baltimore, Maryland. He is a graduate of the Ph.D. program in Criminology at Indiana University of Pennsylvania. He has recently served as a fellow at the Harvard University's W.E.B. Du Bois Institute for Afro-American Research.

IN MEMORIAM

Adam Podgórecki
(1925-1998)

Adam Podgórecki, who did pioneering work in the field of sociology of the law and was a uniquely creative intellectual, died of a heart attack at his home in Ottawa on August 18, 1998.

Born in Cracow, where he received his M.A. in Sociology and a Ph.D. in Law at Jagiellonian University, he eventually joined the Faculty of Warsaw University in 1956. He was inspired by Leon Petrazycki’s ideas on law and society and Maria Ossowska’s pioneering work in the sociology of morality. An independent thinker, Podgórecki soon came into conflict with the academic guardians for the Polish Communist Party devoted to maintaining political orthodoxy.

Recognized internationally for his original ideas, he received many invitations from abroad such as the Law School of Northwestern University, All Souls College, Oxford, the University of Pennsylvania, the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford, the Netherlands Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities, and the Center for Socio-Legal Studies at Wolfson College, Oxford.

In 1972, Podgórecki co-founded the first university department in Poland devoted to socio-legal and criminological research. When the university authorities expelled him and a group of his close associates for “anti-state academic activity,” he reluctantly left Poland and, after one and half years at the University of Oxford, he accepted a professorship in sociology at Carleton University in Canada. This finally enabled him to pursue his scholarly work free of the political constraints in his homeland.

During two decades of his exile from Warsaw, Podgórecki conducted an extensive program of scholarly research in Polish as well as in English. Among his 12 books published in Polish, especially noteworthy are his 1962 Sociology of Law and his A Sociological Theory of Law, published earlier this year.

Among his 14 books published in English, I would like to mention his 1973 Knowledge and Opinion about Law, which he initiated as a collaborative research project with colleagues from various European countries; his 1991 A Theory in the Sociology of Law, and his Multidimensional Sociology, co-authored with his intellectual companion and wife, Maria Los. The most recent of his books are Social Oppression (1993), Polish Society, (1994), and Higher Faculties: A Cross-National Study of University (1997).

I had the good fortune of meeting Adam in 1961 on his first visit to the United States. In the course of a wide-ranging conversation on the problems and challenges of the sociology of law, we decided to submit a proposal to the Secretariat of the International Sociological Association to establish a Research Committee on the Sociology of the Law. Fortunately, our proposal was accepted. Together with colleagues from around the world we initiated a program of conferences and comparative research projects, which are continuing to this day.

A sociologist steeped in law, philosophy and literature, Podgórecki had a long-standing concern with problems of ethics. Given the diversity of social and political systems, there is a need for a set of transcending moral standards, which Podgórecki refers to as “global ethics”. In his multi-volume portrait of a Chinese thinker he calls Si-tien, Podgórecki sums up his theory of global ethics with some of the following propositions:

1. Those who belong to the category of human beings have a duty to be reliable sponsors for all other living creatures.
2. All living creatures are responsible for the whole environment and universe which they share.
3. According to global ethics a human being is not the “lord of other living creatures,” but a cohabitant on the same planet.
   Human beings have a double responsibility because of their ability to diagnose the present and forecast the process of decomposition and destruction (Podgorecki, Si-Tien: The Unknown Chinese Thinker, Ottawa:Carleton University Press, 1993, pp. 77-79.)

The core of Podgórecki’s theory of “global ethics” was developed more than 30 years ago when his idea of human beings as custodians of the Earth, rather than its masters, was a radical departure from occidental conceptions.

Podgórecki’s scholarly work evoked the admiration of social scientists throughout the world. We will miss his brilliance, his wit and his integrity.

Attention:
Members of The American Society of Criminology

For the past several years the Ethical Issues Committee of ASC has been working on a Code of Ethics for the American Society of Criminology. Many others professional associations have adopted such documents; indeed, the document that has been produced was fashioned after the Code of Ethics of the American Sociological Association.

The value of adopting a Code of Ethics is not simply having the option to enforce it. In fact, the committee views the most significant aspect of having an ethics code as the educational benefit. It will be used as a tool to socialize our graduate students and young professionals about responsible and ethical conduct in our profession.

Those who have worked on this document are pleased to present it to the membership for your review and comments. For the next few months we will be collecting responses from the ASC membership regarding the draft code. If necessary the committee will discuss making additional revisions, and then the Code of Ethics will be put to the full membership for a vote in the Spring of 1999.

The draft copy of the Code of Ethics for the American Society of Criminology is located on the ASC website: www.asc41.com, or contact Sarah Hall for a paper copy.

If you would like to comment on the draft Code of Ethics, please feel free to send your responses to Angela Browne, chair, Ethical Issues Committee, or myself (see addresses below).
