IN MEMORIAM

DON M. GOTTFREDSON
1926 – 2002

Don M. Gottfredson, the Richard J. Hughes Professor of Criminal Justice (emeritus) and Founding Dean of the School of Criminal Justice at Rutgers University died in Sacramento on June 23 after an illness.

An expert on criminological prediction, evaluation methods, and criminal justice decision-making, Professor Gottfredson is widely credited for the introduction of systematic empirical methods into the study of crime and delinquency. His large-scale and long-term studies of repeat criminal offending and systematic research about how judges and parole boards make decisions about risk are particularly influential. He was a pioneer (along with Leslie T. Wilkins) of sentencing guidelines, now widely used in state and federal courts. The author of numerous books and articles on criminal justice, Gottfredson was the President of the Justice Policy Research Corporation in Sacramento, the Director of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency (also in California). From 1984 to 1994 he served as Chair of the New Jersey Criminal Disposition Commission. He served as President of the American Society of Criminology.
THOMAS G. BLOMBERG, Florida State University, was named the Sheldon L. Messinger Professor of Criminology.

WALTER S. DEKESEREDY, Ohio University, has received a grant from the National Institute of Justice to conduct an exploratory study of male-to-female sexual assault during and after separation/divorce.

LYNNE GOODSTEIN, has accepted the position of Associate Vice Provost and Director of the Honors Program at the University of Connecticut, beginning August 1.

SALLY T. HILSMAN, a sociologist with a specialty in crime and justice, has been named Executive Officer of the American Sociological Association. Hilsman was formerly the Deputy Director at NIJ, U. S. Department of Justice.

KORN Sriwaropp KUMAR, State University of New York College at Potsdam, has received the SUNY Chancellor's Award for Excellence in Teaching.

ELIZABETH Loftus, has accepted the position of Distinguished Professor at the University of California, Irvine, where she will hold a joint appointment in the Department of Criminology, Law and Society and the Department of Psychology and Social Behavior. Among other honors and achievements, Professor Loftus was recently named one of the 100 most eminent psychologists of the 20th Century and was also the highest ranked woman on that distinguished list.

A Posthumous Letter to Don Gottfredson: Son of God’s Peace*

Dear Don:

You would have blushed at the words directed to you. But it is too late for that. You left us too soon—we, your criminological clan, and especially your Rutgers family; we, who had the good fortune to have been your teammates and friends.

You were blessed with an extraordinary array of character hallmarks, hard to find in any one person in such a profuse combination: your self-deprecating approach, your towering intellect, your gift of making and keeping friends, your indefatigable sense of humor, your total inability to make enemies, your determined yet gentle leadership qualities, your erudition, your integrity, your confidence in the abilities—whatever they were—of your fellow human beings to overcome adversity.

Of course, Don, you will be remembered as one of our profession’s great scholars. We thank you for the very idea of sentencing guidelines, and for your decision-making approach to the management of the criminal justice system, and, indeed, for enriching our understanding of criminology and criminal justice with your many thought provoking publications. We thank you for your academic leadership at three of our nation’s criminal justice institutions: The National Council on Crime and Delinquency, whose director of research you were for many years, the Rutgers University School of Criminal Justice, where you were founder and dean for over a decade, and the American Society of Criminology, which you promoted in many ways, not least of which as president.

If a total stranger were to add up all these accolades, he or she would conclude that you were an exalted mystical figure, hard to approach by ordinary persons. Yet the opposite is true: you were a kind, gentle, warm and gracious dean, professor and colleague, whose open door was always a welcome sight to all of us—students and faculty—who sought your help and advice. You never let us down. Nor was your compassion restricted to your colleagues and students. Remember that day at the National Judicial College when you demonstrated the reality behind your sentencing guidelines: With forty judges in attendance, and ten convicts from the Nevada State Prison (whom we called CONsultants), you chalked off a space of eight by nine feet, a prison cell. You placed one of the convicts—250 pounds and all muscle—into that cell. Then you placed yourself, as a new inmate, into this very same cell—or rather those few inches of space not occupied by your 250 pound cellmate. There had been no rehearsal, there was no play acting. There was only the drama of reality, as it is as it is faced by any judge sentencing a convicted person to prison. After the drama of this encounter which you handled superbly, there was no applause. There was only dead silence, and it lasted while the judges filed out.

Don, you had the magic of compassion and humility. The profession has rewarded you richly, with many plaques, citations, grants and prizes. Your ultimate reward, however, is the love and admiration of your family, friends, and colleagues—and our gratitude for having had our lives touched by you. Even at the end, you did not want us to suffer over your death—that is compassion. You wanted no ceremony to mark the occasion—that is humility.

Don Gottfredson, son of God’s peace, you will rest in peace—and in memories.

Freda Adler

*Gottfredson, principally Danish, but used in other Scandinavian languages, meaning “son of God’s peace”.

Don Gottfredson’s Three Big Gifts

Don Gottfredson was my hero, and I am not alone.

Don believed in science. Policy problems never seemed to make him nervous, because he always saw how they boiled down to some question of evidence. And so there was really no “problem” at all, just a need for a study. It was no accident that he invented “criminal justice decision-making” as a field for scientific inquiry. Thinking systematically about the way the system worked—and how it might work if it were tweaked this way or that—was like a hobby for him. His first gift to the field, one so many of us cherish, is this penchant for thinking about visible and therefore verifiable decision criteria, weights given to decision-making factors, and justifications for departures from previous practice. Don didn’t invent guidelines, he discovered the idea of guidelines simply by listening to an inner voice.

He won a bunch of awards for this work. I think he was pretty proud of the awards he won, but he didn’t hang them up in his office. It would have been too much like a show-off, and that was not consistent with Don’s character. Don liked private amusement so much more than public compliment. Maybe what seemed to him like “private” came across to the rest of us more like “intimate,” because everyone felt befriended by him.

And a lot of people wanted to work with Don. Most of his publications were jointly-authored, something he was deeply proud of. His most influential life’s work—arguably the idea of decision-making guidelines for sentencing and parole—was the product of a long-standing collaboration with one of his best friends, Leslie Wilkins. Lucky Leslie. People loved to collaborate with Don, and he always acted like it was an honor to be asked. His second gift is this body of work, this web of connections, this multiplier-effect body of papers and books. All of us his students; all of us his colleagues.

But everyone knew his favorite collaborations were with his sons. It was quite common for me to have Gottfredson the most frequent name in the bibliographies of may papers. Far too often it was “Gottfredson and Gottfredson? Trying typing that 10 times fast. Unfair. But Don loved it.

So did Donald. Around Rutgers, we used to call him “Dean Don.” People didn’t believe that his given name was really just “Don,” and not Donald. Sometimes editors would change his name to “Donald M. Gottfredson” without asking him, and that would be what came out in print. Look it up.
What most touched people about Don, though, was the extraordinary personal integrity and high character he brought to his everyday life. I'd like to tell two personal experiences with that unequaled nobleness that so easily came to him. (One story I will tell her, the other story I will gladly tell to anyone who asks me, but it will take longer and so I will do it in person.) One of my first paid tasks as a graduate student was to shuttle people from the airports and train stations of Albany, NY, to National Council on Crime and Delinquency training programs in the woods near Rensselaerville, New York. One afternoon, I was startled by someone asking, “Where’s Don?” and I realized that I had forgotten to go get him; had left him stranded at the Schenectady train station for 4 hours. I raced along. At that time, Don was Research Director for NCCD, but he had just begun planning a design for the Rutgers School of Criminal Justice, which he had been asked to set up. On the car ride to the training program, Don described what he wanted the new school to be like. I got hooked right then and there, and wanted to work for the man, to help him build this school. His philosophy of academic leadership, which he would openly say whenever he was asked, was, “Hire good people and get out of their way.” I wanted to be one of his “good people.” For me, it turned out that Rutgers University was the best imaginable place for a young person, cutting his scholarly teeth, to get an opportunity to try some ideas out. The School was a dream come true for me, and it was Don’s third gift to the field.

I have read what the obituaries said about Don, and they are impressive and accurate. Many awards, many contributions to the field; leadership positions gladly accepted and deftly handled; ideas, institutions, and scientific orientations established and made central to our field’s current work. This is all true and all so very important, but not really enough.

Don Gottfredson was my hero, and I am not alone.

JQC publishes papers that use quantitative techniques to address substantive, methodological, or evaluative topics in criminology and criminal justice. Attention is also focused on specific organizational information about the police in different countries and regions, and periodic special issues are devoted to studying police policies and practices regarding a particular topic or issue. The editors aim to improve cooperation between those who are active in the field and those who are involved in academic research, as such a relationship is essential for innovative police work. To this end, the editors encourage the submission of articles co-authored by police practitioners and researchers that highlights a particular subject from both points of view.

JOURNAL OF CONTEMPORARY CRIMINAL JUSTICE
Sentencing Juveniles: Cross-Cultural Trends and Perspectives (November 2003 issue)

We are looking specifically for comparative data on the actual penal climate in juvenile justice, on (new) sentencing options and sanctions used, on different ways of observing and inspecting juvenile rights, and on possible reasons for the change, or the absence of change, as well as future perspectives in sentencing juveniles. The Journal of Contemporary Criminal Justice is a theme journal. Authors are asked to review the following theme and submit relevant manuscripts, due May 1, 2003, directly to: Josine Junger-Tas, University of Utrecht, Willem Pompe Instituut, Janskerkhof 16, 3512 BM Utrecht, The Netherlands.

CRIMINOLOGY & PUBLIC POLICY recently launched its website at:

On our website you will find (1) select content from the print version of the journal, (2) a policy flash/press release area where we highlight some of the studies published in the journal, (3) our submission guidelines and style sheet, (4) subscription and editorial office information, and most notably, (5) an interactive message board.

As we publish articles on criminal justice policy issues, we will open forums on the message board for commentary on the article published or on the policy issue more generally. We have recently opened forums on domestic violence, gun control, and drug testing. In addition, we have a general area for discussions of policy issues not yet explored in the journal, and an area for commentary on the content, format, design, and delivery of the journal itself.

To view the message board, go to the CPP home page www.criminologyandpublicpolicy.com and click “Go to Message Board.” To post a message, please register and sign in.

FULLBRIGHT SCHOLAR PROGRAM

New Fullbright Program Offers Short-Term Grants

The new Fullbright Senior Specialists Program, which offers short-term grants of two to six weeks for U.S. faculty and professionals, is proving very popular. Some 120 grantees have gone to 52 countries and another 680 have been approved to be on a roster and eligible to be requested by overseas higher educational institutions that need their assistance.

Applications are being accepted in the following fields:

- Anthropology and archaeology
- Business administration
- Communications and journalism
- Economics
- Education
- Environmental science
- Information technology
- Law
- Library science
- Political science
- Public administration
- Sociology and social work
- U.S. studies—i.e., art, art history, dance, history, literature

Created to complete the 55-year-old traditional Fullbright Scholar Program, the Senior Specialists Program aims at increasing the number of faculty and professionals who have the opportunity to go abroad on a Fullbright.

“The traditional Fullbright Scholar Program offers longer term grant opportunities and some academics and professionals find it difficult to be away overseas for that length of time,” explains Patti McGill Peterson, executive director of the Council for International Exchange of Scholars (CIES), the organization that manages the Fullbright Scholar Program. “The new Senior Specialists Program offers scholars another option,” she added.

Grantees also undertake new activities designed to support curricular and faculty development and institutional planning at academic institutions in 140 countries around the world. Duties range from conducting teacher training and developing and assessing curricula or education materials, to leading seminars or workshops and conducting needs assessments.

Academics and professionals apply to be on a roster of Senior Specialists Scholars who can be matched with requests coming to CIES through overseas Fullbright Commissions or U.S. embassies. There is a rolling deadline and applicants can apply online through the CIES Website (www.cies.org). Their applications are reviewed and vetted online by peer review committees in their disciplines. Or additional information on the Senior Specialists Program, write or call the Council for International Exchange of Scholars, 3007 Tilden Street, N.W., Suite 5L, Washington, D.C. 20008. Phone: 202-686-4026, E-mail: fulspec!cies.iee.org. The Fullbright Scholar Program is sponsored by the United States Department of State’s Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs. The Program’s purpose is to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and the people of other countries.

FULLBRIGHT NEW CENTURY SCHOLARS PROGRAMS

Thirty top academics and professionals from around the world will be selected to work together to identify the causes and possible solutions for sectarian, ethnic and cultural conflict during the second year of the Fullbright New Century Scholars Program. Sponsored by the U.S. Department of State, the New Century Scholars Program seeks to engage experts of different nationalities in collaborative research on important transnational issues. One-third of the scholars are from the U.S. and the rest are from other countries.

The theme for the 2002-03 scholarly effort is “Addressing Sectarian, Ethnic and Cultural Conflict Within and Across National Borders.” The program is open to academic and professionals from a variety of disciplines, and the deadline for applying is October 1. Proposals may be in any area of the social sciences, history, public administration, public policy, law, media and comparative religious studies. Interdisciplinary proposals are especially welcomed.

Examples of issues the scholars will probably examine include: cross-border ethnic identity and diaspora; religious nationalism and religious pluralism; clashing values of tradition and modernity; emigration and immigration as factors in multiculturalism; effects of refugee settlement on the creation of new civil societies; stateless nations.

The New Century Scholars Program is administered by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars (CIES), a private organization based in Washington, D.C. For information, consult the CIES Website at http://www.cies.org/cies/NCS/text_NCS.htm or contact Dr. Micaela Iovine, senior program officer. Phone: 202-686-6253; email: miovine@cies.iee.org.

REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS:
2003 Law & Society Association Summer Institute

The Summer Institute Committee of the Law & Society Association (LSA) invites interested institutions to submit requests for proposals (RFP) to host the 2003 Summer Institute. The purpose of the LSA Summer Institute is to provide an intensive four-day workshop with approximately 24 advanced graduate/law students and junior faculty in the field, led by 12 sociological scholars and focused on intellectual themes, problems and debates in Law & Society. The objective of the Institute is to advance scholarly development, publication and collaborative efforts among new scholars in the field, and to highlight this work within the Association as well as for other academic audiences. The Institute's format should be innovative, engaging and ideally lead to publications that will reflect the outstanding research in our field.

The LSA Summer Institute, which occurs biennially, is a collaborative effort between the LSA Summer Institute Committee and the host institution. Together, the Committee and the host institution discuss the proposed theme(s) for the Summer Institute, identify sociological scholars who are most qualified to lead the proposed Summer Institute (from both the host institution and the Association generally), and select participants (who respond to the mid-November 2002 call for applications). Though the precise dates will be negotiated with the host institution, the Summer Institute usually takes place in July or August. The LSA Summer Institute Committee is eager to discuss arrangements with any interested institution and to facilitate the Institute in whatever way provides maximum benefit to the host institution.

The budget for the Summer Institute is financed jointly between LSA and the host institution. Based on previous experience, the estimated budget for the Summer Institute is $30,000. LSA will provide $15,000 and the host institution will contribute all additional resources. The host institution is responsible for providing meeting space and arranging lodging and meals for participants and leaders as well as securing local transportation and handling other local arrangements. Your proposal should:

1. Propose one or more themes, outline the intellectual scope, content and format of the proposed 2003 Summer Institute;

2. Propose a host committee structure to develop academic content and handle local arrangements (please include vitae of potential host faculty)

3. Provide a concise description of the facilities, accessibility for air travel and wheelchairs, local financial support, a detailed budget, which lists all costs (including room and board), and demonstrates how all costs above $15,000 will be covered by your institution; and

4. Discuss how your proposal will further both the goals of the LSA (such as featuring exceptional scholarship in the field, providing resources to promising new scholars, discussing research in progress, and enhancing the diversity of the LSA) and the goals of your institution.
For a list of previous Summer Institute themes, sample programs and basic facilities required, please contact ganter@lawandsociety.org OR write Lissa Ganter, Administrative Coordinator, Law & Society Association, 205 Hampshire House, University of Massachusetts, 131 County Circle, Amherst, MA 01003-9257 U.S.A.

Members of the LSA 2003 Summer Institute Committee are: Howard Erlanger, School of Law, University of Wisconsin, Madison; Mark Gould, Department of Sociology, Haverford College; Christine Harrington, Law and Society Program and Politics Department, NYU; Mona Lynch, Administration of Justice, San Jose State University; Teresa Miller, Law School, University at Buffalo, SUNY; Corey S. Shdaimah, Ph.D. student, Social Welfare Policy, Bryn Mawr; and Cheri Wilson, Department of History, Loyola College.

Proposals to host the 2003 Summer Institute must be received by October 1, 2002. Please email your proposal to Christine.Harrington@nyu.edu or send 6 copies to

Christine Harrington
Chair, Summer Institute Program Committee
Institute for Law and Society

And please email one additional copy to pipkin@lawandsociety.org OR send it to Ronald Pipkin, Executive Officer, Law & Society Association, 205 Hampshire House, University of Massachusetts, 131 County Circle, Amherst, MA 01003-9257 U.S.A.

GORDON TRASLER

Gordon Trasler was the first Professor of Psychology at Southampton University. He was a quiet, self-effacing man whose contribution to the psychology of criminality and delinquency would have been more noticed had he been more in the public eye. At a time when the study of criminality by psychologists was in its infancy his book, The Explanation of Criminality, published in 1962 broke new ground. In his writings he argued strongly for an eclectic approach, dismissing those who thought that explanation of antisocial behaviour could be found simply in social or biological or learning theory sources. Although he did not formally use the term “biosocial” as an approach to the explanation of criminality he was a pioneer in this view, which is now acknowledged as the only sensible way to seek explanation of criminal behaviour. He was not known for his own research on the topic; nevertheless his contribution to the area was considerable. His analysis that we should distinguish between those crimes that involve the violation of norms usually established in childhood, such as stealing or aggressive and assaultive behaviour, and those for which there was not a childhood analogue such as the evasion of taxes, breaches of traffic regulations and trading in addictive drugs gave clarity to our thinking about these problems. If applied carefully this should have led to distinguishing between the likely effectiveness of sanctions against these two types of behaviour.

Unfortunately there is a tendency for us to go on inventing the wheel when people like Gordon Trasler have already provided us with the blueprint. His writing style was clear and lucid. Such gems as “the consistent and unenterprising conformity of the socialised man”, when contrasting the behaviour of the non-transgressor with that of the psychopath, make the comparison so clear and exemplify his approach to his work in the field.

Gordon Trasler was born in 1929 in Bournemouth, where his father worked for Royal Insurance. He grew up in Middlesex, attending Isleworth Grammar School before moving to Bryanston. After two years’ National Service with the Royal Fusiliers he went to University College, Exeter, in 1949, then an external college of London University, to study Economics as an undergraduate, and Psychology as a postgraduate. His doctoral thesis, on foster care in Devon, was later published as In Place of Parents (1960). In 1955 he joined the Prison Service as one of the first prison psychologists and began his career in Wandsworth, where he administered innumerable personality and intelligence tests to inmates. So many inmates were tested that they became familiar with the questions and passed them around. Thereafter he worked for some time on a sessional basis at Winchester Prison, testing prisoners and writing reports for court. In the 1950s this was the stuff of prison psychology. His experiences in the Prison Service were clearly influential in shaping his view of crime and criminality. The Explanation of Criminality pre-dated Hans Hysenck in pointing to the relationship between neuroticism, extraversion and crime, and was seminal in the way in which it sought to explain crime by reference to offender personality. In 1957 Trasler left his full-time post in the Prison Service to take up an appointment as a lecturer in the Psychology Department at Southampton University, where he remained for 37 years. In the early days he was almost single-handedly responsible for teaching a large part of the Social Science Faculty’s degree programme, including social institutions, sociological theory and methodology. He was appointed Professor in 1964, and was then one of the youngest professors in the country. It was a huge honour to be appointed to the position at such an early stage in his career but it came with expectations with which Trasler struggled for much of his life. He set high standards for himself and was his own most demanding critic. His research and publications were wide-ranging, with an emphasis on psychopathy, youth crime and treatment for offenders. He was a member of several government committees on criminal justice: the Advisory Council on Penal System (1968-74), the Wootton Committee on Non-custodial Penalties (1968-70) and the Younger Committee on Young Adult Offenders (1970-74). He had the true scientist’s capacity to see the limits of his own perspective, writing in 1973: It must be admitted that the present state of research into criminal behaviour offers some encouragement to those who oppose any attempt to construct a formal theory of criminality. And again in 1987: There is presently great vagueness as to the characteristics being transmitted genetically, and there is no reliable evidence implicating abnormal chromosome complements, or damage or malformation, with increased risk of crime in general, or of violent crime in particular. Attempts to demonstrate that delinquents (or, in more general terms, offenders) are poor learners, or are resistant to conditioning, have not been successful. His wish to apply psychology is reflected in his work on foster care and the evaluation of offender treatment programmes, and in his willingness to serve as a magistrate.

In 1990 he was awarded the Sellin-Gluck Award by the American Society of Criminology in recognition of his contributions To the subject, one of the very few psychologists to have achieved this distinction. He attended the conference at which the award was to be made, but found it enormously difficult to receive the award before the large and distinguished audience, primarily because of the agony which such public attention gave him. After retirement from Southampton in 1994, he became Vice-President of the Centre for Crime and Criminal Justice Studies at King’s College London. Why was someone so asocial held in such affection? It was because colleagues could rely on him unfailingly for help, for generous recognition of their work. He was palpably a good man.
